School days, school days...

Dear old golden rule days . . .
When reading and writing and arithmetic were taught by a teacher carrying a hickory stick.
You sat in straight rows and never talked;
you did your assignments and never balked.
The accepted apparel was dresses and ties.
You always behaved and never told lies.
The daily atmosphere was one of doom and gloom and you feared there was no world beyond the classroom.

What a change

in the golden rule days

Once the teacher relied on blackboards and chalk.
Now headsets and discussions take the place of formal talk.

No longer restricted by four classroom walls,
you were encouraged to explore beyond Kennedy's halls.
While some students are thankful that school has changed, there are those that feel it still should be rearranged.

Friend? Why girlfriend, naturally! Didn't your mother always tell you they were the best kind? So it seemed until she reverted to that lowest of female tricks: dumping you for a man with money (from a Bloomington Sun paper route, no less), your younger brother.

Girls, yech. You learned your lesson and returned to your senses, going back to your childhood buddies at the same time. You were relieved to find that they hadn't changed much. They still liked to laugh and play and give snuggies to all the little neighbor kids . . . including you. Dumb kids.

A friend for every season.

They should have understood. A man of your status needs his rest and a proper sun tan. Besides, little brothers were made to get stuck with the yardwork. But little brothers were also made to tell Mama what they saw you doing with the neighbor girl behind the garage.

Just as you had expected, Mom and Dad were really nice about your accident. They were just glad you were alive, they didn't care about the car, and no, it didn't matter that Dad would have to walk 31 miles to work each day. Of course, they were justified in selling you to an African slave trader.

There comes a time in every man's life when even a teacher can be a friend. But your sophomore English teacher? Indeed, when you realized that praying alone wouldn't save you from junior grammar. She remembered the apple you didn't give her, however, and smilingly told you to . . . buzz off.

That's what coaches are for: giving you a word of comfort after you've put the ball in the opponents' goal. His words weren't so comforting, however, when he told you what happens to those who score for the opponents: the team gives you a nice, long, cold swirlie.

a friend for every reason

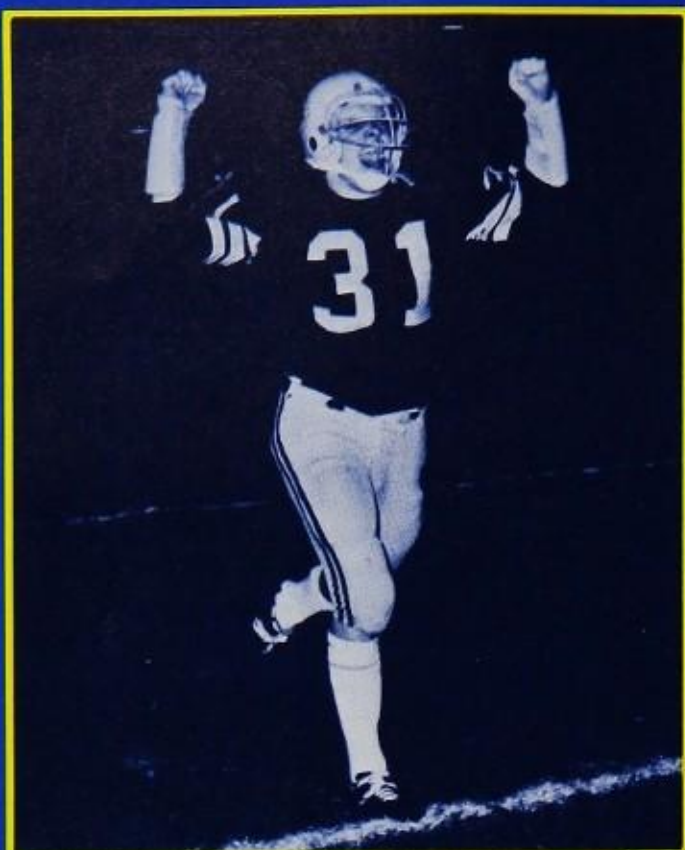

Face it. Your world was collapsing and you had to get away. After wrecking the car, you felt it would be in poor taste to hit Pops for a loan, so you turned to Gramps. He was broke and suggested you get a job. Not your style, you said. Time to sell your Charlie's Angels Bubble Gum Card collection.

With your world in chaos, you turn to the one who never complains and was always there. Even when you were playing catch in the yard and stepped in some dog do-do that oozed through your toes, you couldn't get mad. You love her because she's your dog.

You win!

Situation: fourth down, goal to go. The defensive line holds — you're a hero! Your tackle broke up the play and caused people to pay attention to only y-o-u, people like Mom and Dad, Coach McKay, an Ohio State scout, Bud Grant's top assistant, and even that special cheerleader you call your own. Man, do you have it made!

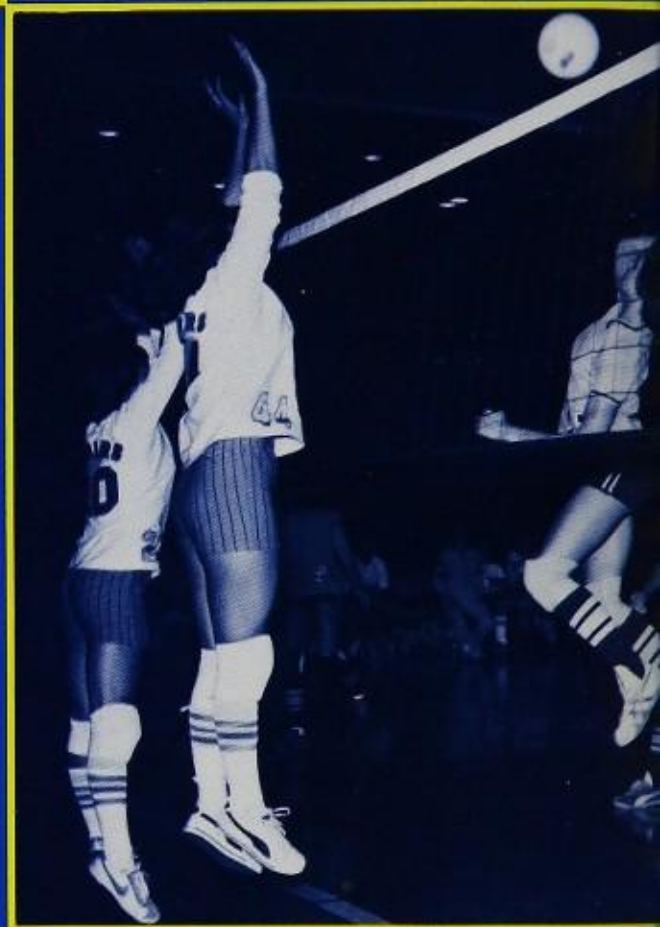

You lose!

Situation: a sideline rush, a pileup of players . . . you leaped into the air to head the ball, only it went right to an opposing forward. Coming back down you land on the coach. There goes your ankle, his smile, and your starting position. You weren't a total loser, though. At least you got to read the Saturday paper.

You lose!

Situation: After running another three grueling miles around Lake Nokomis, you come to the realization that the lake has never changed, nor have the trees, the ducks . . . and your running time. At least you weren't to blame, however. Your father would simply have to answer to the team for making you wear those dorky Keds for Kids . . .

You win!

Situation: posting a winning time in the 200-yard relay. Ah, but winning was only one good thing about being a swimmer. You also had the joys of chlorine-bleached hair, scaly skin, and blood-shot eyes. and your 4-ounce blue and gold Speedo swimsuit — wasn't that a zinger? Well, didn't the guys ask out every mermaid they happened to see?

You lose!

Situation: a matter of being in the wrong place at the wrong time. It was time for a punt, and you took up your position. What you hadn't counted on, however, was a nearsighted punter who would confuse the ball with your butt. You never thought you'd be getting your kicks this way when you went out for football.

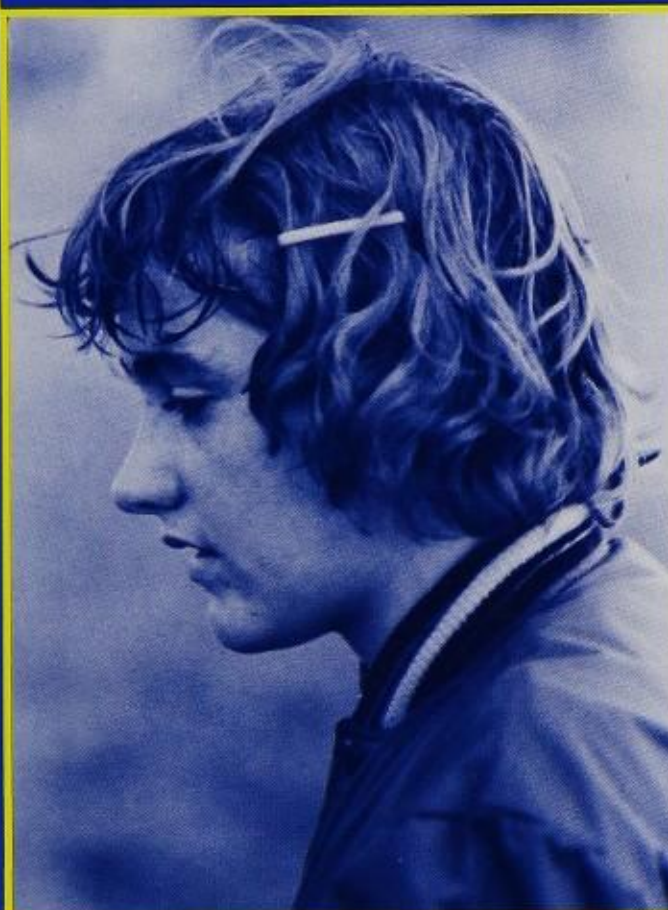

You win!

Situation! The whole school came to a meet. Total silence, total concentration and effort caused every muscle to ripple. You'd never been better at your routine or at winning the sighs of the sophomore chicks. Fame had its drawbacks, however. It wasn't easy choosing between 74 Sadie Hawkins offers.

You win!

Situation: No. 1 ranked Cooper came to your gym, eager to make you look like fools. They became the fools, though, when you made them eat the ball more times than not. By doing so, you proved to all the skeptical male superstars in the stands that you don't have to wear a jock to be one. Memo: cancel your future subscriptions to Seventeen.

You lose!

Situation: discouraging. The season has just ended, and reporters from Sports Illustrated (not to mention The Minneapolis Tribune, The Torch and Panther Prints) have passed you by again. You spread the rumor that your hopes for a gold medal in the 1980 Olympics have been thwarted because of a case of crippling athlete's foot. Word of advice: Don't blame Desenex.

You win!

Situation: the ultimate in team unity. You've just scored the tie-breaking, winning goal, and it's your turn to get smothered with the sweaty hugs of your teammates. You decided that nothing could beat a hug from a fellow winner, that is, until you got a hug from a certain guy on the sidelines. Talk about a victory!

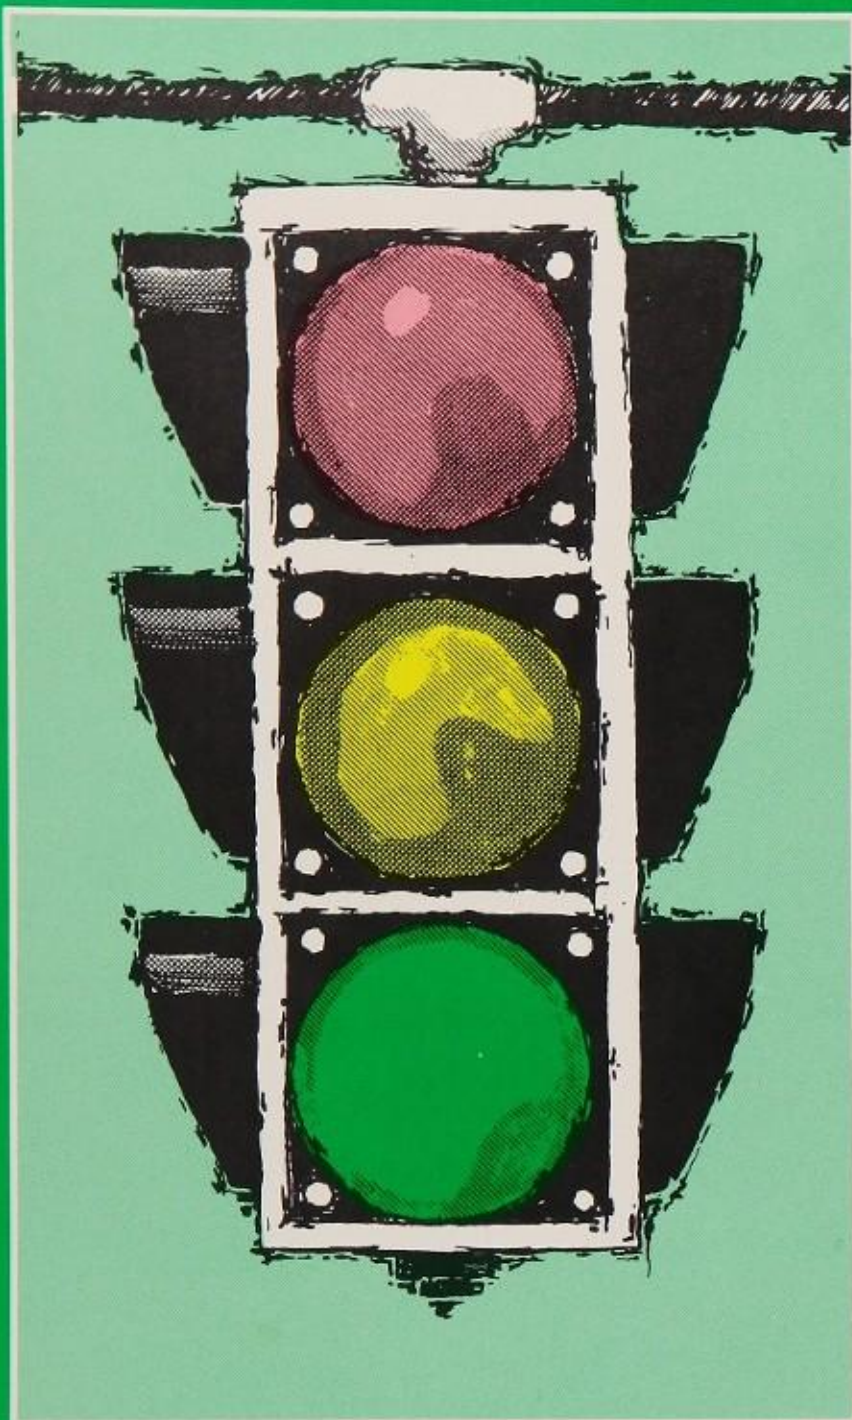

Whether absorbed with the elaborate traditions of Homecoming or fascinated by the simple beauty of the season's first snowfall, you made the most of those times that were unusual, and therefore special.

Formal smiles to first snowfall

When you are good, you are very good...

Go! Open those books, sharpen those pencils, figure those equations, research that paper! Fun, fun, fun on Friday night!

Go! Get out that vacuum, put on your best apron, turn on your smiles for Mommy, Mommy, Mommy!

Go! It's Homecoming. you're a senior, so dance, eat, be merry!

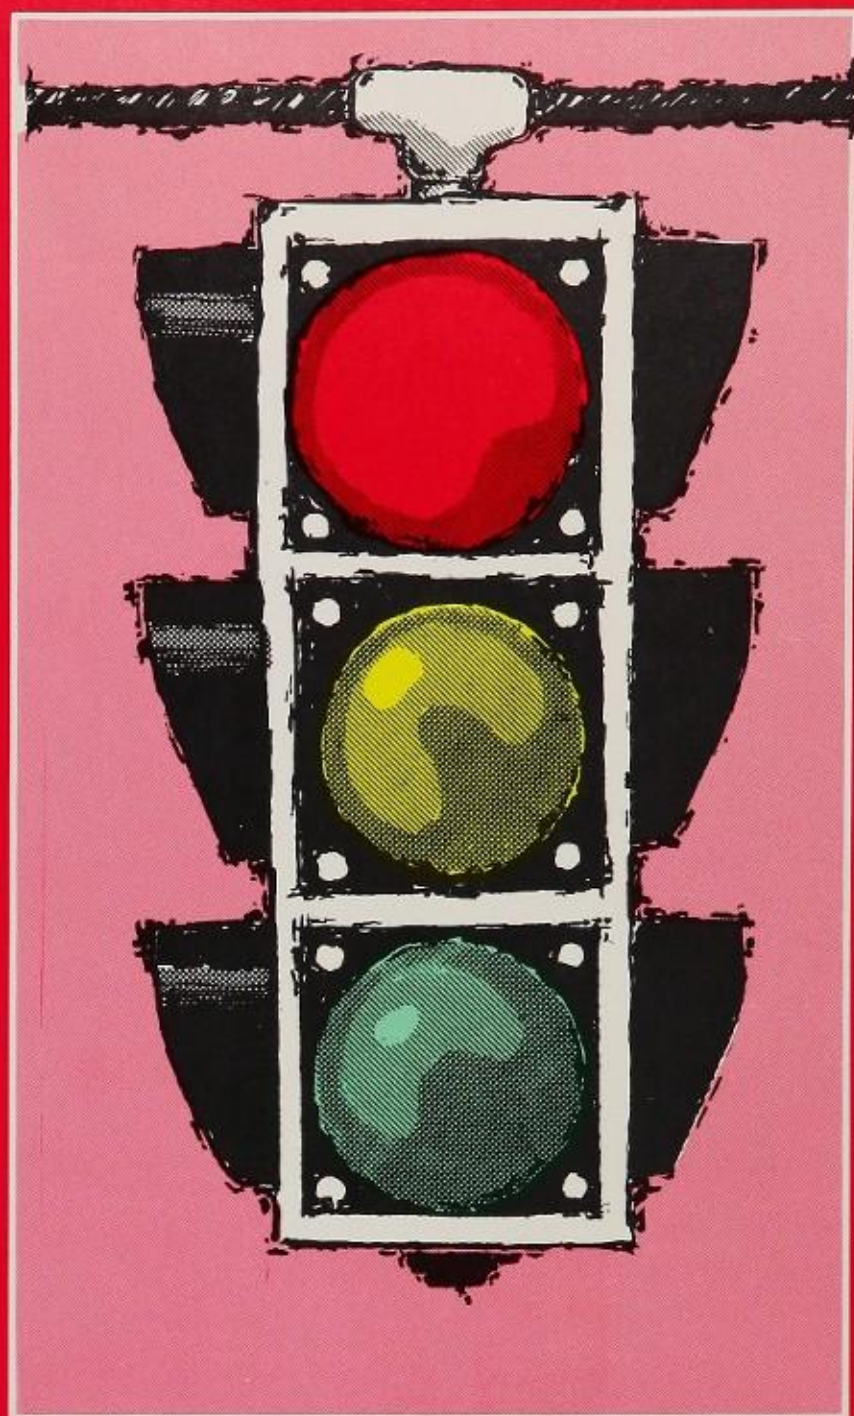

Go! Do your good deed! Help the lady and walk, skip, don't trip!

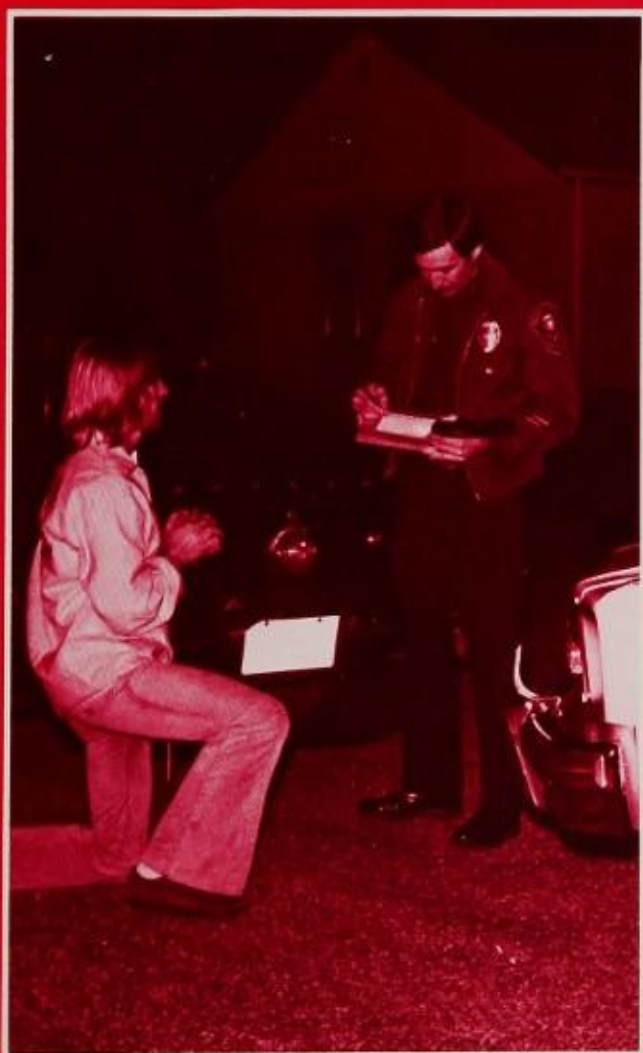

When you are bad, you are even better!

Stop! Just because your house got lawn-bagged, teepeed, and egged is no reason to use shaving cream for revenge, revenge, revenge!

Stop! Read that sign! Don't park, hug . . . etc.!

Stop! Fix that muffler, obey that noise ordinance and kneel, pray, repent!

Stop! Quit smiling, quit joking, quit having fun! Tee-peeing is rotten, messy, icky!

Changing moods bring color to your life

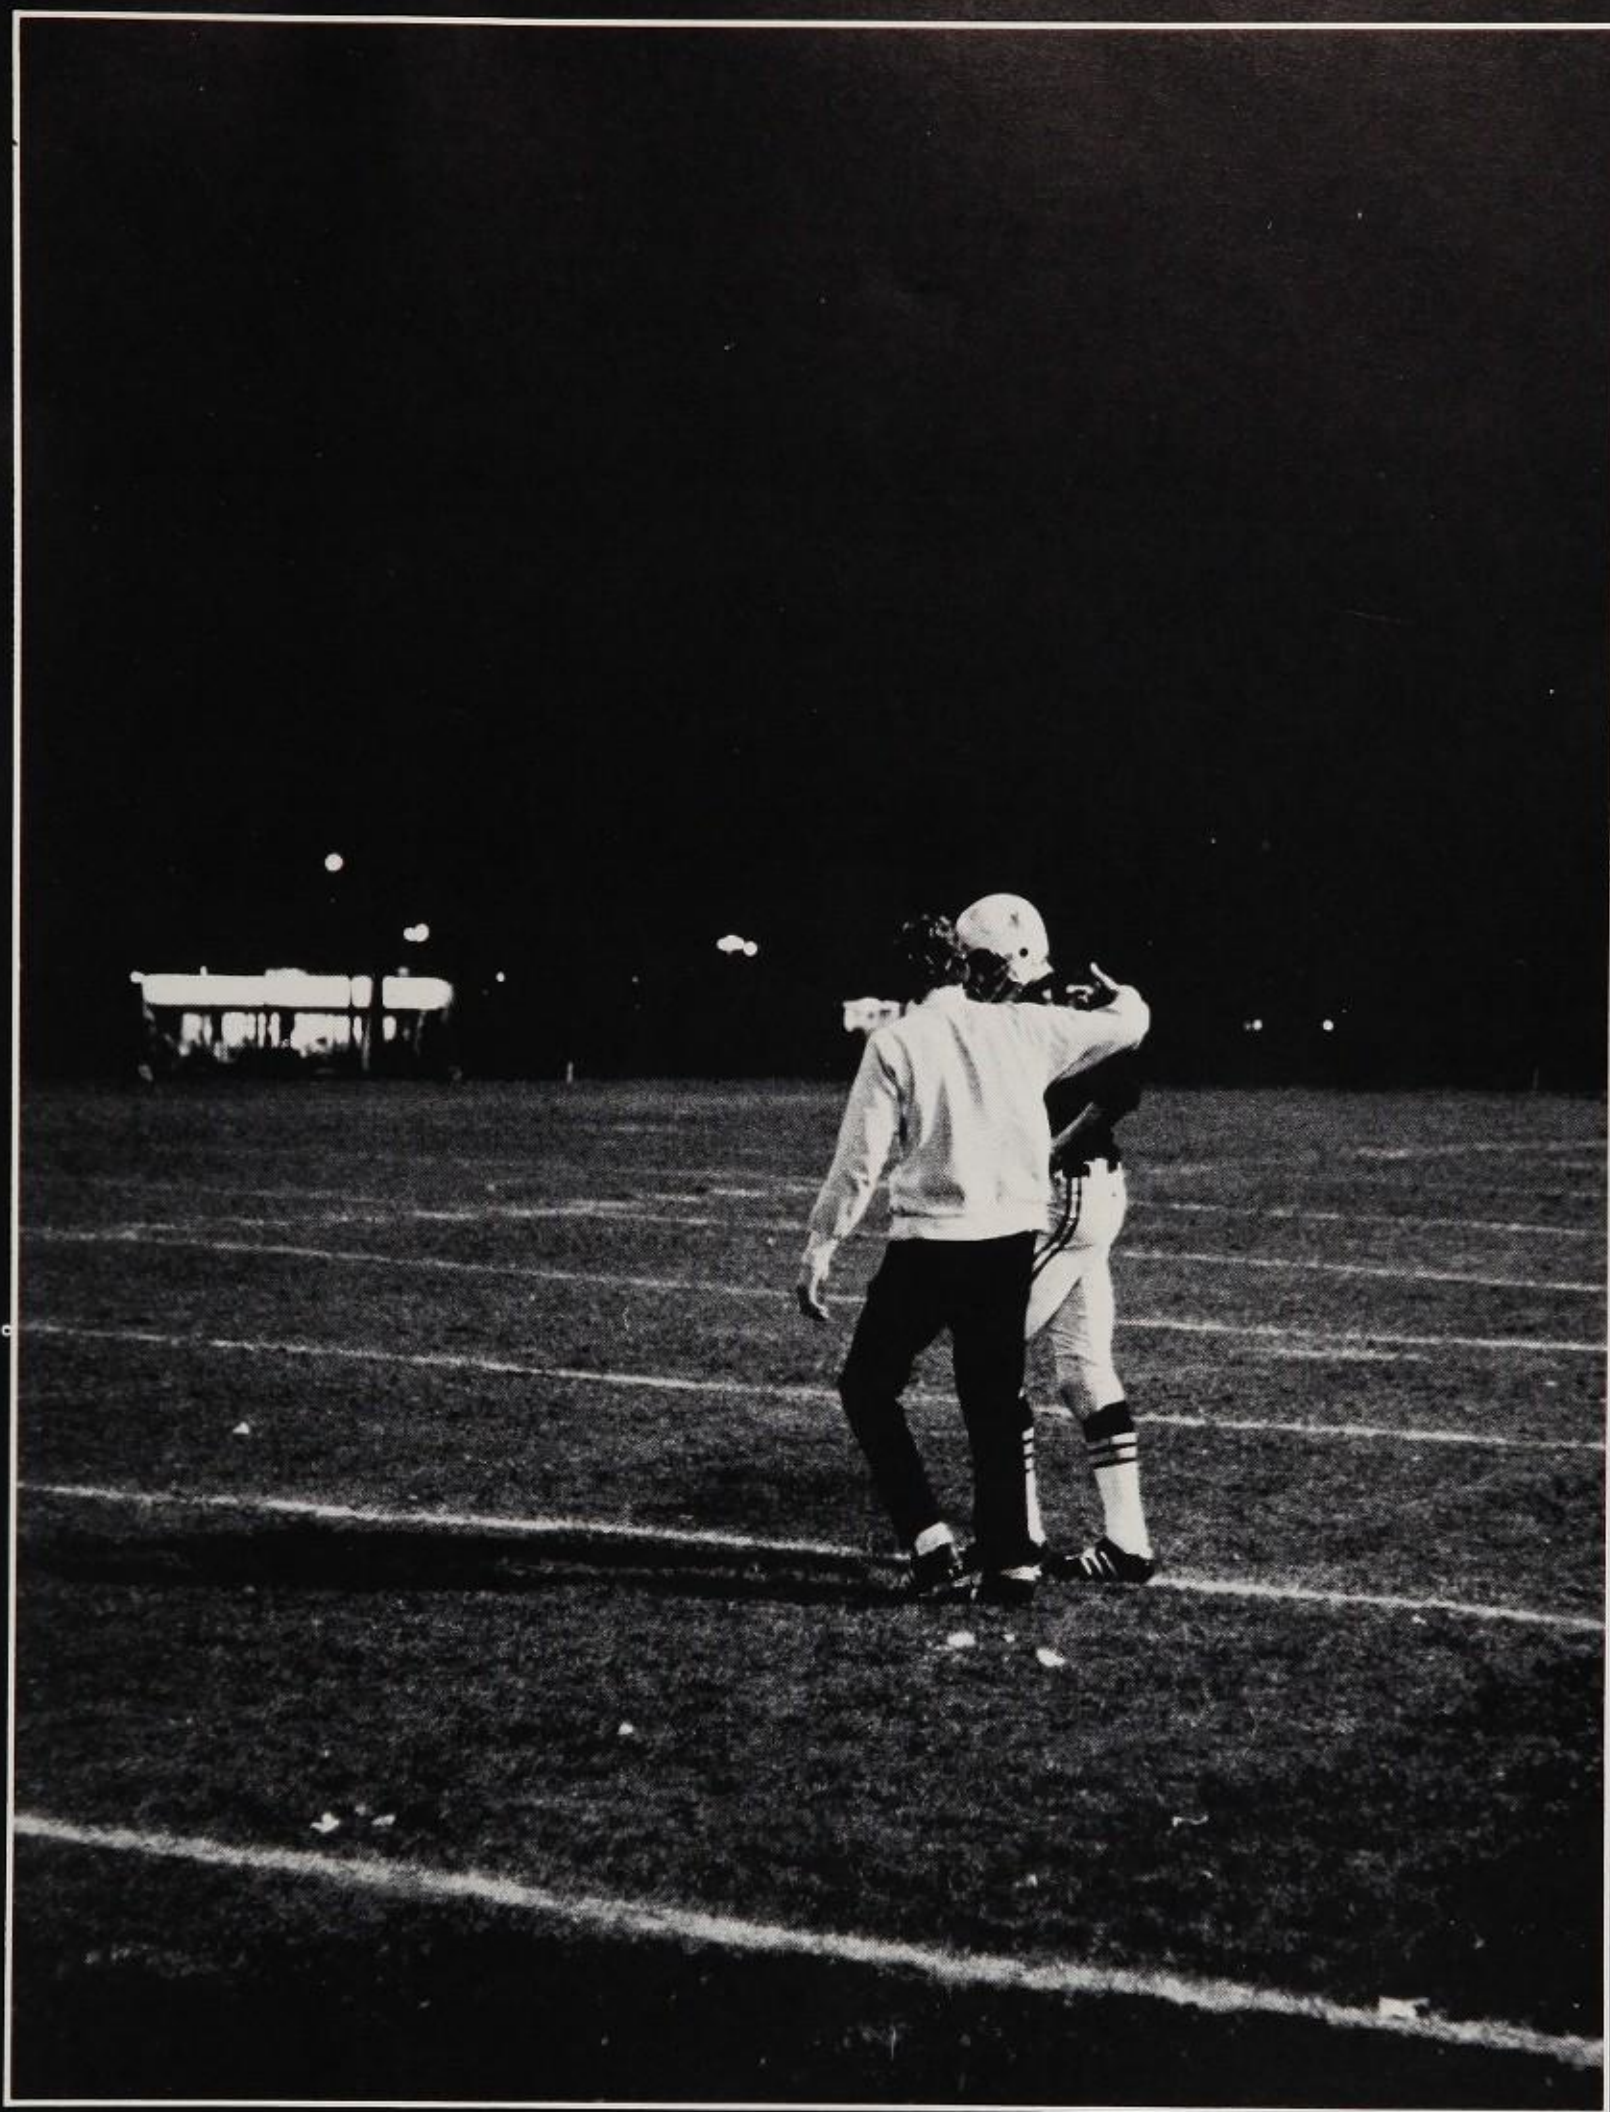

Your moods were as varied as the Crayola colors. You may have been in a rowdy mood for a pepfest, or in an anxious mood before a test, but then there were quiet times when you would stop and take in the beauty and serenity of the world around you. As a necessary contrast to due dates and crowded schedules that filled your everyday world, you welcomed those quiet times during which you saw a beauty that would otherwise have gone unnoticed.

Daytime hours . . . hours that were filled with pressures and pleasures that were typical of a school life that was 186 days long. The dull routine of classes and homework gave your life a structure and sameness that caused you to search for something more, something that would show others what you were.

Your life is as different as day

Ah, sweet nighttime hours . . . hours that offered you more than just the ordinary. It was the time when you could prove the worth of your talents. By involving yourself in school activities you found a contrast that was as distinctly different as day and night.

Stop! Time Capsule Ahead!

Do not hide, bury, or entomb . . . Do not wait for 100 years to examine . . . Look at the next two pages and enjoy the trappings of teenage life in 1978

There are certain objects that emerge from dusty attics and dank basements from time to time which seem capable of arousing great amounts of sentiment in our parents. These remnants of a bygone era cause their faces to light up with glee as they bring into sharp focus memories of teenage life. But why let all that "junk" accumulate in your house when it could all be put into a time capsule for safe keeping until you want to see it again? Most time capsules, however, are utterly useless when it comes to helping people remember the real essence of times past. They are jammed full of such boring articles as coins, textbooks, and newspapers, then buried under 30 feet of dirt with the ridiculous resolution not to dig them up for 100 years. Dumb, dumb, dumb. To be really useful, your time capsule should contain some of the most significant items of teenage life and should be convenient so you don't have to dig it up out of your backyard every time you want to look into it. You're in luck. Now, through the miracles of modern science and printer's ink, all of these items have been made to appear on the next 2 pages of your yearbook. This time capsule will sit snugly and dryly on your bookshelf, ready to help conjure up instant memories whenever you want and need them. Enjoy!

The time capsule begins with Paul Skinner's version of the casual but nice-for-school look of 1978.

Stretching dollars to meet stretching needs

Monday:

"Uh, Dad, before you go to work today, could you give me some money for things at school? If I expect to stay on the swimming team, I've got to pay my $10 user's fee now. Also, the Josten's man will only be at school today to take money for my class ring. That only runs $65, but then I need another $6.50 for graduation announcements. We get measured for caps and gowns today, too. I'll need $5.25 for that.

While we're at it, why don't we get my Senior Party ticket today, too? Give me $18 for the ticket, plus the $6 we owe for rental of the Met Center for graduation, OK?"

Dad's Monday bill: $110.75

Tuesday:

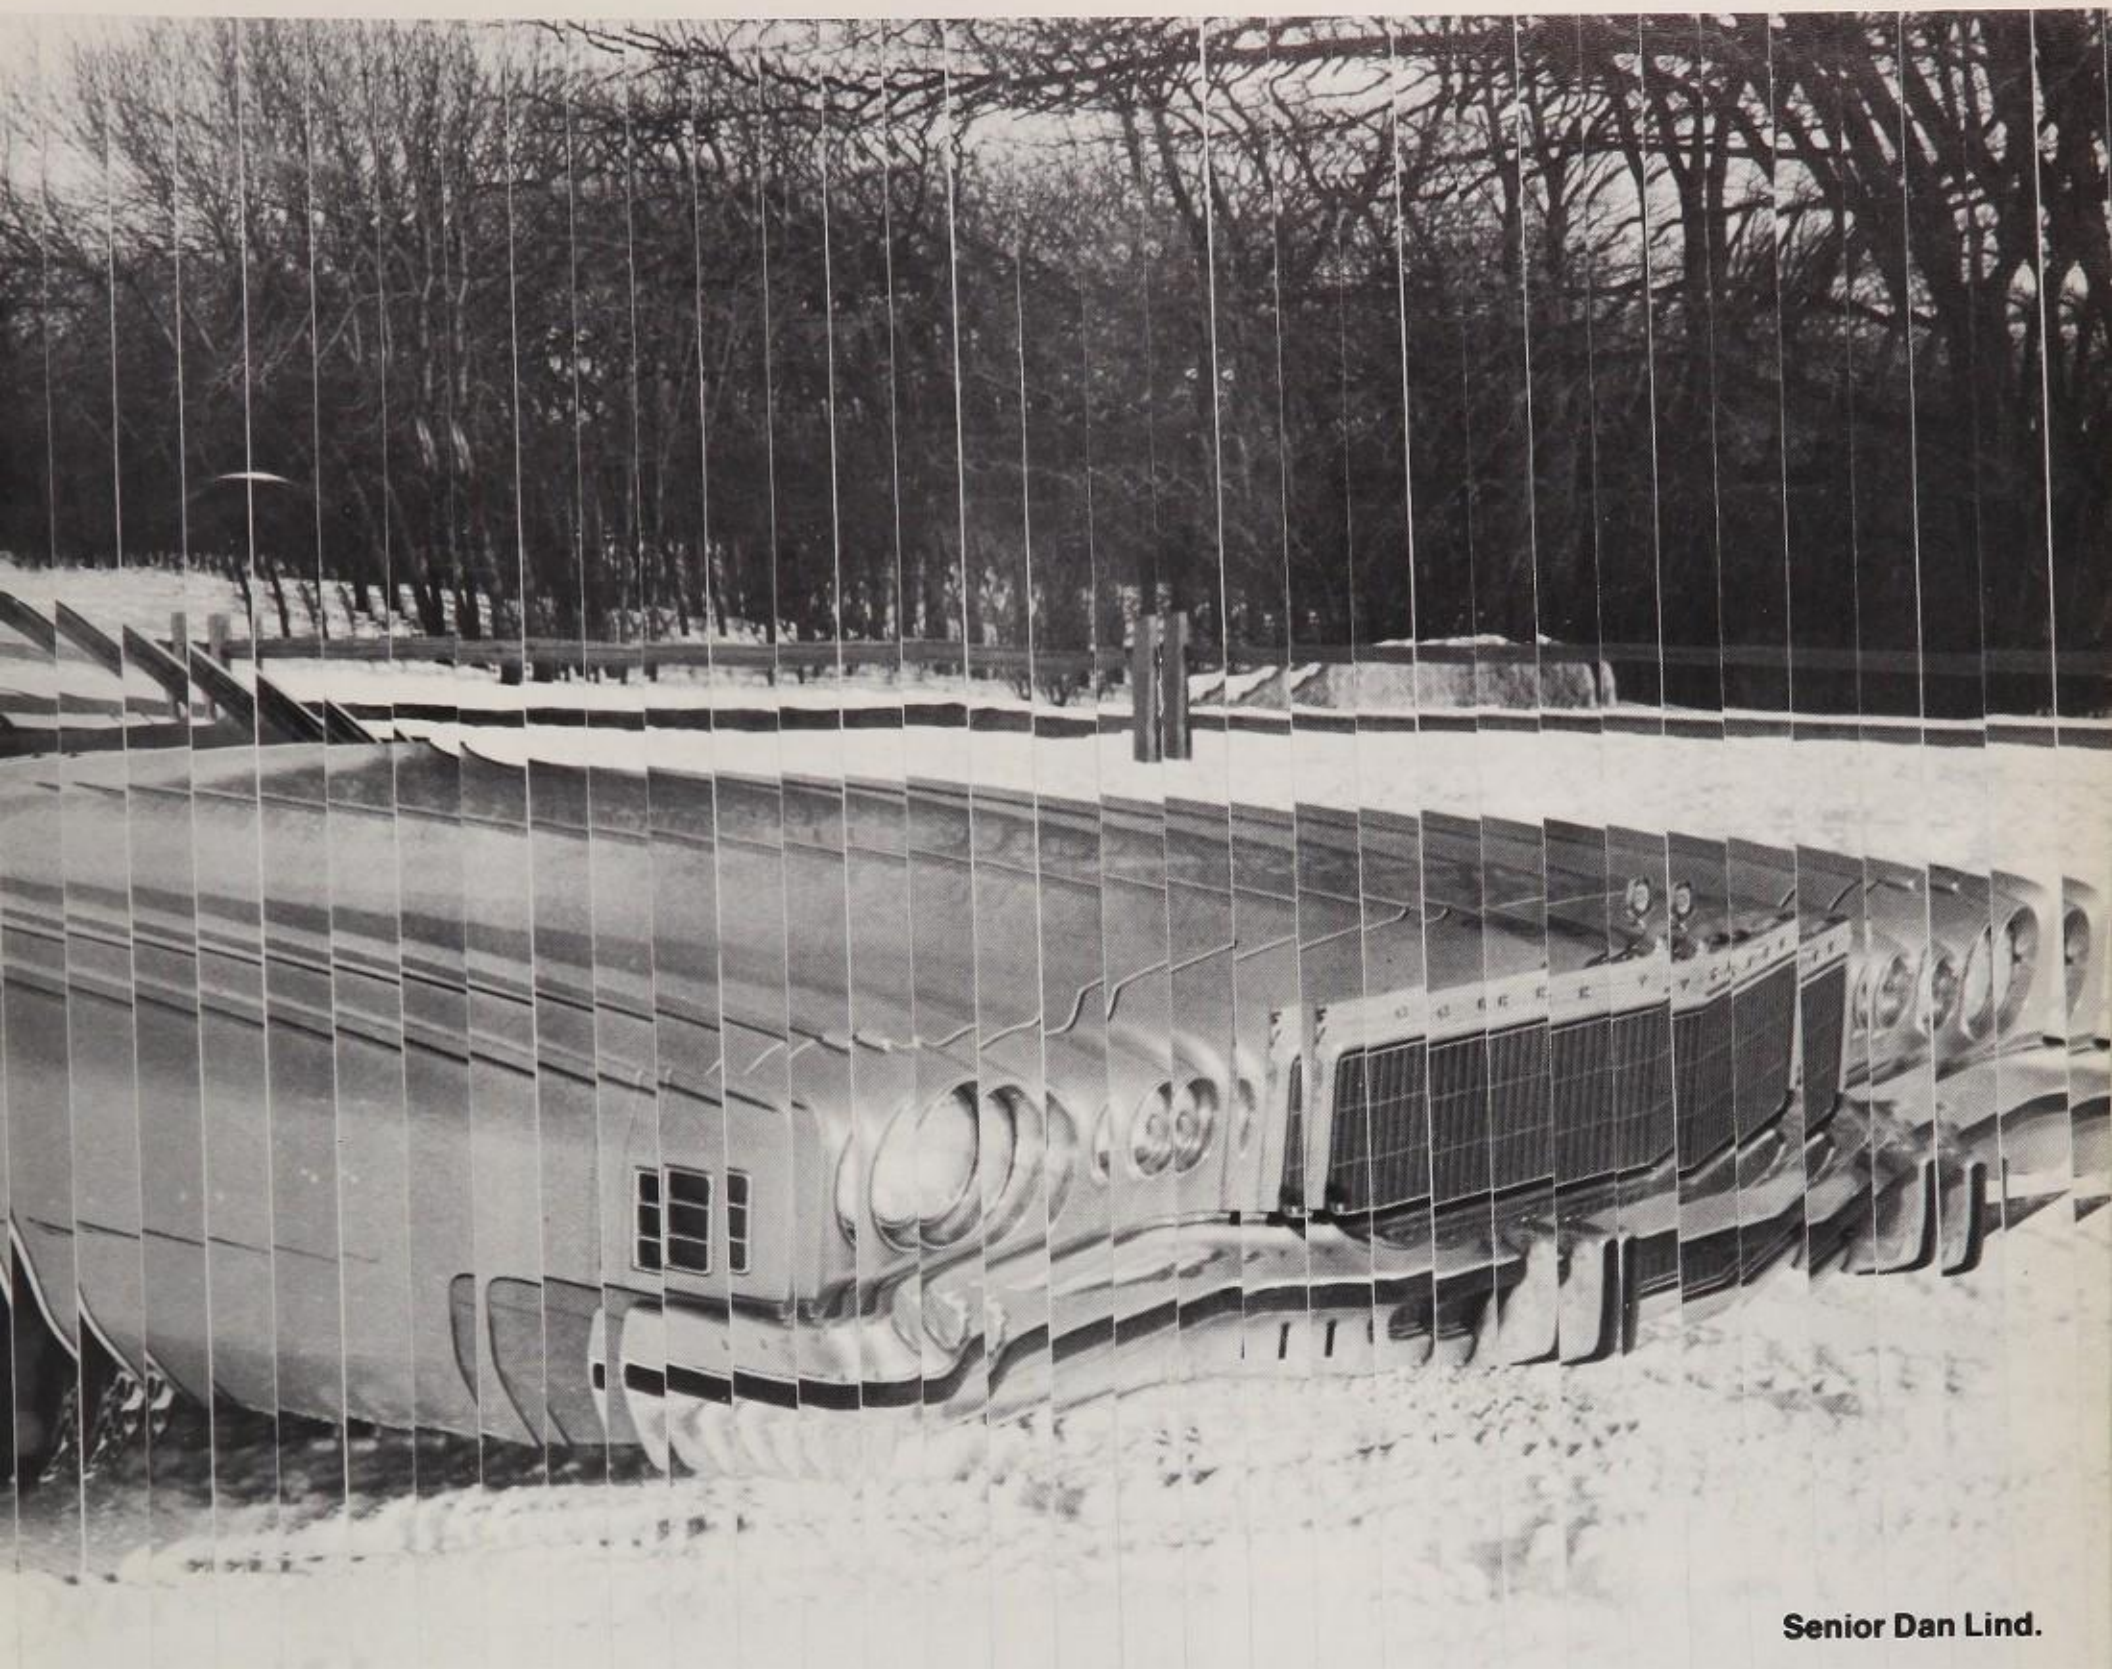

"Mom, when will dinner be ready? I'm picking up the guys to go to Fridley for the basketball game, and we've got to leave early. Dad, my car's gas tank needs filling. Can I have about $12 for that? And the car is so dirty. Another buck buys a car wash. I'm really broke this week, Dad, could you give me 75 cents for my game ticket too? Ah, Mom, are we only having chicken pot pies for dinner? Yuk. Well, that means I'll have to go to McDonald's after the game for something to eat. Let's see: my usual 2 Big Macs, fries, and a large Coke . . . Dad, I need another $2.35 for tonight, OK?"

Dad's Tuesday bill: $16.10.

Wednesday:

"Dad! Look at this ad in today's paper! We've got to go to Radio Shack right after dinner. They've got the greatest 3-way air suspension speakers with 10-inch woofers for just $99! I've been looking at Kenwood receivers, too. You know you said you would get me a new receiver for my birthday anyway. There's one on sale for $248. Then if we run over to Harpo's we can get in on their sale of albums and tapes. You and Mom will go wild over some new Queen albums. I'd really like some Doobie Brothers tapes for my car, too. Two albums at $6.98 each, plus a few tapes . . . let's say, $31.92 on tapes. Greatness! Right, Dad?"

Dad's Wednesday bill: $392.88.

Senior Dan Lind.

Thursday:

"Hey, Dad . . . are you awake yet? I forgot to tell you last night that I have to have a check today for the Utah ski trip during spring vacation. I need $185 today or they will cancel my reservation. While we are talking about skiing, how about some more money for the clothes I will have to bring along? Pierce is having a sale this week on down vests. If I have $40 for a vest, and another $35 for a color-coordinated ski sweater, I can get by with just $13.50 for Levi's denim jeans. I heard that we have to be dressed up for dinner at the chalet. Time to buy that 3-piece corduroy suit for $90, huh Dad?"
Dad's Thursday bill: $363.50.

Friday-Saturday:

"Dad, before you leave on your weekend snowmobiling trip, I've got to talk about this weekend. I've got a date tonight for the movies. Betty wants to see "Oh God" and tickets for that are $3.50 each. Then I thought we'd get a pizza at Cicero's. $7 should cover that. Tomorrow night I'm going out to the Disco with the guys. Tickets are $2.50, and we'll probably grab a few donuts at Winchell's afterwards. I never spend more than a few bucks there, but I will need another $12 for the car. All that driving around while you've been out shopping this weekend has really eaten up the gas. Better slow up, Dad."
Dad's Weekend bill: $30.50.

Sunday:

"Dad, nice to see you. You'll never guess what! I got accepted at St. Olaf next year! I'm supposed to send back $100 right away as a deposit. Wow, will this be great! The $7.50 we spent on the ACT test and the $15 it cost to apply really went for a good purpose, right Dad? Oh, I forgot to show you this part of the acceptance letter. My application for financial aid fell through because you make too much money. It's OK, though. Tuition and room and board just run $4900. Come to think of it, that is a lot of money. Maybe you should be thinking about a part-time job, Dad. We could use the money."
Dad's Sunday shocker: $4922.50.

Wagging tongues are happy tongues

There is no end to rumors
once a story hits a grapevine

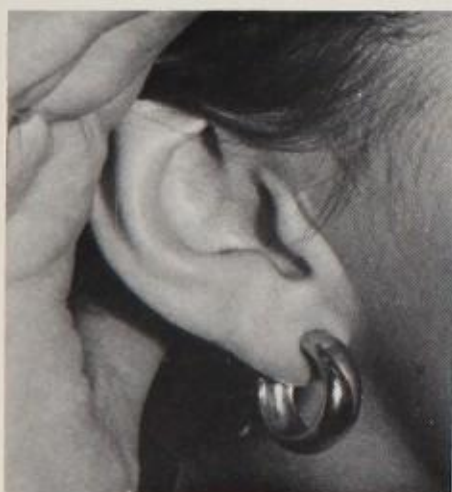

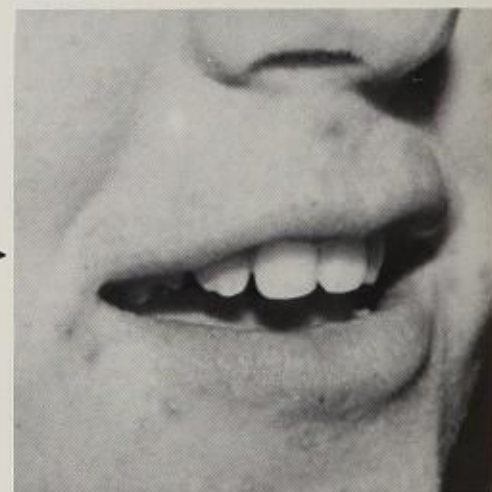

2/ "Hey, Jan, I just talked to Lori and do you know what? She heard that Todd was playing broomball at Running Park last night, so she went there and he came over to talk to her a couple of times."

3/ "Hey, Diane, I just talked to Lisa and do you know what she said about Lori? Well, that cute Todd asked Lori to play broomball on his team with him, and he spent the whole time just showing off and talking to her."

5/ "Hey, Pat, Diane just told me that Lori has been playing broomball all the time with that cute Todd and his friends and that they always go out with the team after games, but last night he took her out alone!"

8/ "Hey, Chuck, Sue told me that Todd and Lori are secretly going together, and he gave her a ring 3 months ago. I guess her family really likes him a lot and he's over there all the time."

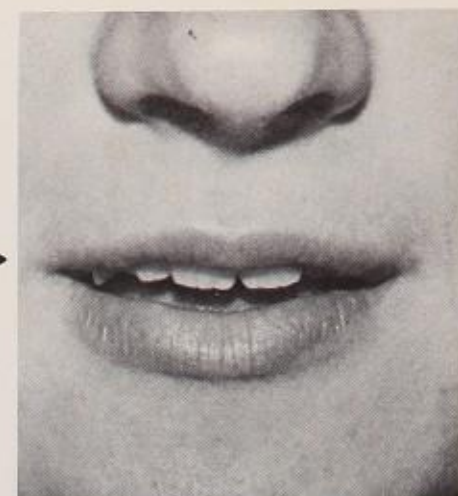

10/ "Hey, Todd, I heard that you asked Lori to go to the school Prom. I also heard that you are going to spend summer vacation at her family's beach house in Florida. Man, when did all this happen?!?"

11/ "Lori?? Lori who? I don't even know a Lori . . ."

1/ "Hey, Lisa, you'll never guess what happened! You know Todd, that cute guy in biology? Well, I was walking by Running Park last night when I saw him playing broomball. He saw me and he said hi."

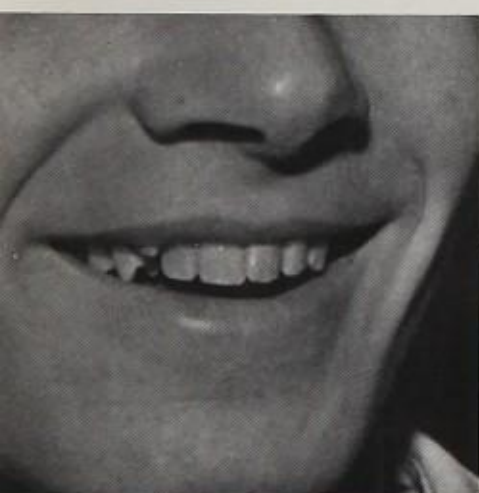

2/ "Hey, Julie, I was with Jan at lunch and she said Todd asked Lori to play broomball with his team last night. Then he asked her to go to J'S with the team for pizza and she didn't even have to pay for anything."

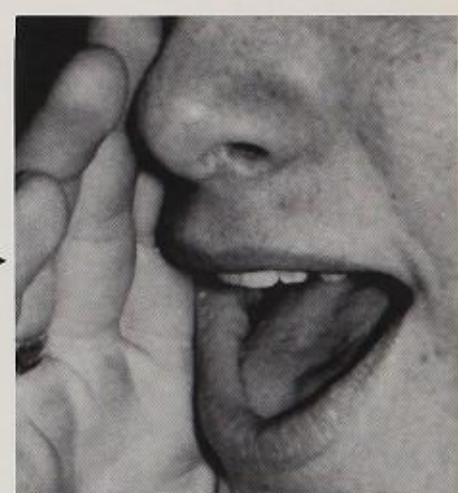

3/ "Hey, Sue, Julie said that Lori and Todd have been playing broomball all winter together on a team with Todd's friends. Well, I guess last night Todd picked her up but they never went to the game."

4/ "Hey, Kris, I just saw Pat and do you know what? Lori has been telling her mom all along that she's been playing broomball on Todd's team every night, when really Todd's not even on a team."

5/ "Hey, Rick, Kris just told me Lori and Todd are going to Prom together and he might be going to Florida with her family over spring break. I didn't even know that they knew each other."

12/ "Hey, you, what's your name? Lori? Have we met?"

genus: Metallium Bracium

Oh, the disadvantage of having braces. People were always trying to sell you to Japan for scrap metal, farmers kept trying to hire you to be a lightning rod on their barns during electrical storms, and the Rescue Squad gave you no end of grief when you and your boyfriend, who also wore braces, kept getting your bands hooked together. There was one benefit, though. KDWB came in better on your braces than on any Pioneer receiver at Radio Shack.

genus: Fungus Toesis

Sports equality had its drawbacks. Athlete's Foot is no respecter of sex, so once you became a jock, you got creeping crud between your toes. Whoever thought your toes would grow 15 times more fungus than any bacteria culture in Biology.

genus: Numerous Nubium

Nice things happen to girls' bodies when they grow up. Then there's hair growing on legs. . . . So you shave, because Underalls took away your panty line, but they can't cover your nubs.

genus: Avoidus Examus

This disease is a close cousin to the 24-hour flu, except that it usually lasts only 1 hour. Symptoms are brought on by a lack of proper studying and include violent stomach pains, abnormal bodily functions, and a general thrashing about of the arms and legs. You knew the only known cure was 1 hour of uninterrupted rest on the nurse's little cot, followed by the bell at the end of the period. Add to that a hearty lunch of pizza burgers and a note from the nurse that you've been under too much pressure and that you should not be hassled, and you've got it made.

genus: Itchus Crotchus

Man, were you in trouble. To relieve the symptoms of this embarrassing disease, you walked around with your hands in your pockets. People would not believe you did that because your hands were cold forever, though. Your coach took you aside and told you about this wonderful product that takes care of such problems. Then, when he saw your jock crawl across the lockerroom floor by itself, he gave you some more advice: wash your jock.

genus: Foundus Nubi

You used to search out pseudo-whiskers with a magnifier and a nail clipper. At last you have real black nubs growing on your face. Careful with that blade, however, so your nickname won't change from Babyface to Scarface.

genus: Frizzius Split-Endium

Blow-dried hair: fluffy and light, with crackling split ends. Your alternatives: keep the dryer and have Brillo pad hair, or drop the dryer and have all the attractions of hair that's like limp spaghetti.

genus: Halitosis Extremis

It should have been obvious when your formerly friendly girlfriend began sitting in the back seat — alone — and would only shake your hand at the end of your dates, when your dog moved his bed out of your bedroom and into the garage all by himself, and when your mother's plants wilted instantly whenever you talked to them. You had bad breath, but you finally got the message. In your case, once in the morning might not be enough. Isn't that the Pollution Control Agency that is setting up a monitoring station in your backyard?

genus: Squintus No-Moris

For the first time people found out you did not have Oriental ancestors. You were able to open your eyes wide and actually see with the help of your $200 soft lens contacts. And what did you discover? You saw how amazingly good-looking you really were. Red eyes and lost lenses aside, you were really one heck of a guy. One problem: you also were able to see your girlfriend up close for the first time and yech . . . was she a dog.

genus: Erradicus Pimplus

Tired of tearing them out by the roots with your pliers, and even more sick of the nightly sandpaper and flesh-colored plastic wood routine, you got smart and you got Mud. Do remember to wash it off, or your zits will rot and smell.

"Hey you! Mr. Lang wants to see you!"

"Hey you! That's the wrong color pass!"

"Hey you, with the red shirt! Where were you during the fire alarm?"

"Hey you! Where's your pass?"

"Hey you! Didn't you walk by here 3 times already?"

"Hey you, with the cigarette! Put it out or you'll get a referral."

Confucius Lang say, 'Students caught standing in hallways have no class'

"Hey you! That's your third tardy.
Guess you'll be seeing Mr. Lang
tonight."

"Hey you! Don't you know you can't be in the hall
during the first 10 minutes of the hour?"

"Hey you! Why is your pass written in pencil?"

Remember that morning when you were blissfully dozing in class, lost in the melancholy voice of your English teacher, when suddenly the classroom atmosphere was electrified by the sight of an imposing figure in the doorway? There he was, tapping his clipboard against his leg and twirling his beard with his fingers. There was only one Bergie Lang; you knew him as the school's attendance supervisor. He looked over the class with an eye as keen as a hawk's. Then, with index finger outstretched, he pointed you out and motioned with his clipboard for you to follow him. Calmly you walked out of the room, undaunted by the sighs and giggles of your classmates. You could read "Referral" written all over his face. What had you done wrong this time? Then you recalled being tardy for math 3 times this week; you simply smiled when Mr. Lang said, "Have fun in detention." You returned to your class like a mature student, commenting on the color of Mr. Lang's neck. Your emotion-filled first hour experiences caused you to need to take an extra 5 minutes in the lavatory before writing yourself a tardy pass to second hour phy. ed. Trouble struck again on your way to the gym, however, when you were noticed by a hall monitor, who growled, "Hey, kid, where in the hall are you going? Don't you know you can't be in the halls the first 10 minutes of the period?" You escaped by dashing in the lockerroom, where you sought out your teacher and presented him with the forged pass. Unfortunately, he realized it was the wrong color to have come from the math area. You would be confounded by the cagey Mr. Lang again, and this time you would really be in a cage, called "suspension."

Hard earned with endless

Who cared about all the frills of a real career . . . pension plans, 5-day weeks, and chances for advancement? You just wanted some money — $150 a month and you could consider yourself rich. So you decided to get a "part-time" job and to sweat out every penny. In your pursuit of the almighty dollar, you made some sacrifices that may have seemed unbearable to other people . . . no football or dating for you. You ran home after

Much to their fathers' surprise, high school girls actually did put their hair brushes down and leave the bathroom mirrors once in a while to mingle in the real world. The girls could usually be found lying around the house in blue jeans and bathrobes, but fortunately for society, neither were the staple of their public wardrobe.

Hassles fade with realization of high school's end

Wow, we're almost there: at Graduation. Just think, in a couple of days I'll be on my way out of here. Out. Gone. Free. No more getting ripped out of a Senior Skip Day. No more not getting to decorate the halls for Homecoming. No more having to stay with the juniors and sophomores through the last day of school. And most of all, no more being hassled about being late to class. How the teachers expect us to get to class in 5 minutes is beyond me. What do they expect us to do? Run to class and not stop to talk to friends? You've got to be kidding. Well, at least I didn't wear a red shirt the day of that fire drill. It must have been a bummer getting questioned just because you wore a red shirt. If it wasn't a red shirt we got questioned on, it was whether or not we had a pass. You could get asked for a pass 5 times in the same hall. Non doikin'. Oh well, before long I won't have to worry about these things again. I'll walk up to the Graduation platform, get my diploma, flip my tassel and be done. No more high school. Yup, that'll be it. Forever. Just think — we will be all done. But that also means no more pepfests, getting rowdy, or going to Mac's. Yea, the next time I go to a game, I'll be one of those "graduates." I'm sure; look at me, getting all choked up about graduating. Never thought I'd be sad about leavin' this place. The Senior Party will be the last time I'll see all my friends together. Ya know, I think I'll miss not seeing the same people I've been with every day for the last 3 years. So now what do I do? Where am I gonna end up after I graduate? Maybe I don't mind that we still have a couple days left before we're out and on our own.

STUDENT LIFE

'50's Day quiet; dance real boss

'50's Day seemed to involve only half of the student body — the girls. Many pairs of bobby sox and saddle shoes were seen in the halls, while the DA's and white T-shirts were few in number. The lack of response during a mixed-up (and at one time cancelled) School Spirit Week, ended with a rather quiet pepfest. The Senior Class seemed on the edge of revival when they urged their classmates on to victory during the trike race. After that brief show of spirit the gym settled down to an unfamiliar low roar. But school spirit, that at times this year seemed to be lessening, came alive when over 300 students dressed up in their '50's outfits for the dance that evening. The dance became the place for everyone to be noisy and have a peachy keen time, something that could have been done at the pepfest. A '50's band, Scribe, provided the tunes for bopping and jitterbugging. Although '50's Day seems to be losing its popularity with some students, the '50's Dance still remains a boss item for everyone from year to year.

Sense of unity increases with traditional script and beauty of Coronation ceremony

No single event during the entire school year has the ability to bring the school together more closely or more emotionally than does Homecoming Coronation. So it was in 1977, when the fourteenth version of the school's traditional Coronation was presented. The script has remained the same since it was first put together by English teacher Orrin Bergan in 1965, and the reactions it has caused also have not varied. The same warm applause greeted the 20 sophomore, junior, and senior royalty members when they walked down the glittering runway to the throne area. Present, too, was the same feeling of tense anticipation as a hushed crowd awaited the announcement of this year's king and queen. While students had voted in the first election only for members of their own class, all students were able to cast ballots for king and queen, for these 2 persons represent the entire student body. Finally, when the winners' names had been read and the 1976 Homecoming Queen, Brenda Anderson, had finished putting on the crowns, King Mike McArdle and Queen Debbie VanPelt were welcomed by the tears and thunderous, sustained applause of a satisfied student body. Amazed sophomores watched Coronation with awe, realizing perhaps for the first time that it might be something special after all to be a part of Kennedy High School. For seniors, meanwhile, Coronation was all the more meaningful, for it would be the last one that they would attend that would involve them as students of the school. In future years they might return to see the Coronation ceremony, but seniors knew future participants would be strangers going through the rituals that once had been celebrated by themselves.

Rain fails to dampen spirits at Homecoming

Once Coronation has been completed, only two things worry Homecoming supporters: rain and a football loss. Both were part of Homecoming 1977. Even so, the pepfest went off as planned, as banana eating delighted the fans. Rain in the evening caused cancellation of the halftime shows. Only a few drenched fans watched the team lose. The warm atmosphere of the dance soothed dampened spirits, as Homecoming events ended and memories began.

King, Queen feel honor, appreciation

The true feelings that went through my mind during the week of Homecoming are difficult to convey. Not only did I feel honor in being crowned Kennedy's Homecoming queen, but I also felt honored to be a part of the enthusiasm and unity within the school. The people I met, and the experiences I encountered during the week of Homecoming, will always be remembered as an important part in my years at Kennedy. Thanks so much for making Homecoming 1977 such a fantastic success.

Queen Debbie VanPelt

Being selected Homecoming King was a true honor and an experience I will always remember. It was all so much fun. I felt that this experience enabled me to meet and work with a lot of students in the school. All the organizations performed exceptionally well during the week of Homecoming, and because of everyone's school spirit and pride, I think it was one of Kennedy's best Homecomings. Thank you for the experience. It is something I will never forget.

Dances contrast in both style, participation

After the fall sports season had ended, students turned their attention to the Kolleen - sponsored Sadie Hawkins Dance. For about 300 students, the dance provided an outlet for their enthusiasm in mid-November. While the band Aire played soft slow songs and popular hits, the dance's Daisy Maes and Lil' Abners made their way to the Hitchin' Post for the mock weddings and kisses that would follow. Contrasting with the informal fun of Sadie Hawkins was the January Winter Formal, which attracted only 120 students. The dance sponsors, a Junior Achievement Company, lost about $40 on the venture as the event failed to generate the kind of interest associated with Sadie Hawkins. Not even the crowning of Sue Peterson and Todd Buelow as Winter Royalty could create the kind of excitement that seemed to prevail at Sadie Hawkins.

Fall play turnout puts future shows in jeopardy

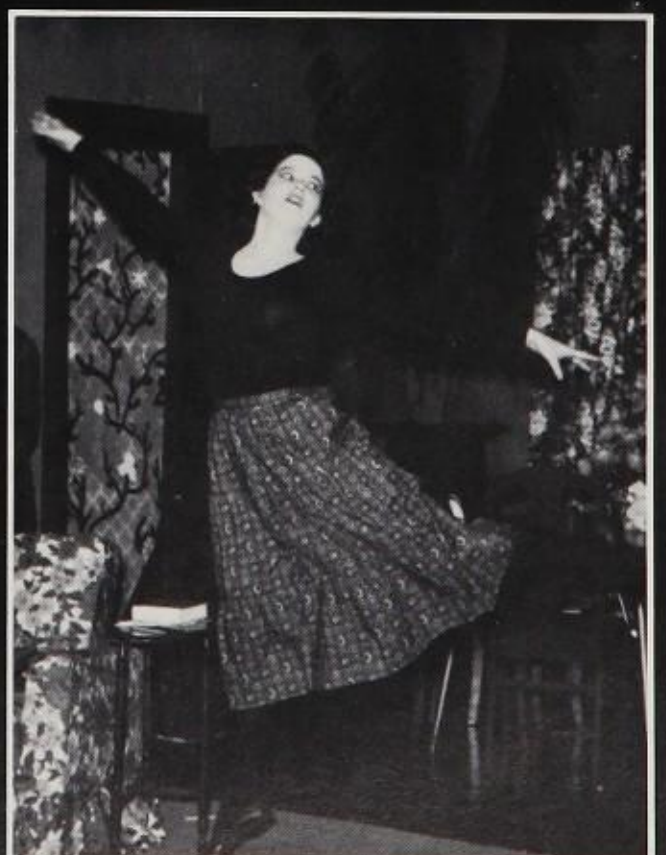

As the curtain opened on the fall play "You can't Take It With You," the 18-member cast had a feeling of disappointment as they looked into the mostly empty seats of the auditorium. As in past years, drama students did not receive even a fraction of the support given by the student body to athletics or music activities. Lack of audience support means lack of income for the Kennedy Theatre. Directors were left with the prospect of putting on small productions in the future, providing the school could afford to finance any shows at all. Although audience turnout was minimal, the cast still felt some satisfaction in participating in the play. The small number of characters in the play enabled cast members to work closely together and to develop new friendships. Directors Lee Engler and Joyce Luckfield guided the cast through 8 weeks of rehearsals during which the cast members had a willingness to do more for the show than just playing their parts. For the production to work, actors and actresses had to help the show's small crews gather props, build sets, and make costumes. As the final curtain was pulled, cast members were able to look beyond the empty seats and realize that audiences are not the only measure of a show's success. They knew they had accomplished something worthwhile by putting on a good production and by making good friends, and that's what mattered most to them.

Heat, friends combine at school Prom

Entering the Prom dance floor at the Radisson South Hotel, one might have expected to see the glittering decorations usually associated with formal dances. Instead, all one found at the seventh annual Bloomington Tri-School Prom were a band and people . . . lots of people, totalling 700 couples. Paying $7 per ticket were 180 Kennedy couples who joined friends from Lincoln and Jefferson in the overly crowded, overly warm ballroom called the Great Hall. The crowds and heat caused many elegant hairdos to flop long before couples could get through the lines to have formal couple pictures taken by a professional photographer. Looking for ways to cool off, most couples took the chance to grab cups of punch and head for relaxing walks around the hotel's pool courtyard. They returned to the ballroom, however, when the band played the theme song for Prom, "Ageless and Evergreen" from a popular movie of the year "A Star is Born." Prom was more than dancing and socializing and picture taking, however. It also involved dinners out at places like l'Hotel Sofitel, Charlie's, the Orion Room, or the Rosewood Room. Area hotels were strict about students renting rooms for after-prom parties, so many couples joined with friends at home parties that often included late-night breakfasts.

Grads end school with senior party

Even if the seniors had learned nothing else in their 12 years of school, at least they all knew what the letters g-r-a-d-u-a-t-i-o-n spelled. During their final days at Kennedy, the Class of '77 was very much aware of that word and the word p-a-r-t-y, as these words dominated nearly every conversation. Anticipation of their final activities together gave the seniors a sense of unity that carried them through the speeches of fellow graduates Jim Ritter, Caralynn Seorum, and Mary Farrell at Graduation. Parents once again managed to raise the money needed to rent the Met Sports Center for Commencement, and provided the manpower that was needed to make the all-night senior party a reality as well. Pier '77 ran from 11 p.m. to 5 a.m. at the school with more than half the graduates in attendance. The $18 ticket price paid for a sit-down dinner catered by North Central, fruit and taco stands, play money for gambling, handwriting analysis, and free caricatures. A game room with foosball, miniature golf, volleyball, and the band Perception provided additional entertainment. Broadcasting from Kennedy, KSTP gave the new grads their first chance to be on the radio. By the evening's end the graduates came to realize that they had yet another word to master: their f-u-t-u-r-e.

Time was always a problem . . . almost as if the stopwatches that were a part of their trade were keeping tabs on their every plan, their every move. Nothing hindered physical education teachers more than the hourly class periods that demanded students change clothes, participate in an activity, shower, and dress again, all within 55 minutes. To escape the limitations put on the hourly schedule, teachers had planned an extensive program of out-of-school activities that would give students the chance to explore sports that could be practiced and enjoyed all during their lives. Time again became the department's problem when the School Board ruled against field trips that excused students from school for more than a single day. Excluded, then, were overnight trips that would enable students to practice skills and experience learning first-hand in a natural environment, like cross country skiing, canoeing, and snowshoeing. Not actually being there, students had to imagine how their bodies would react to the varying conditions of the outdoor environment. What caused the ban on extended field trips was the feeling students were missing classes that were also important. Once again, time — and perhaps jealousy of the teachers whose departments had no such trips as a part of their curriculum — limited a program.

Language Arts: A pain in the head

Throb. Throb. Throb. The pain was awful. Many students were too preoccupied with other interests to fully involve themselves with language arts activities. The result was a persistent pain for students and teachers alike. Teachers suffered when they had to deal with students whose papers reflected a gross lack of attention to basic usage rules. Students, too, felt pain when they saw the results of their sloppy work. A district-wide writing assessment showed that students needed to improve composition skills. Teachers understood that this meant they should give greater emphasis to such usually mundane topics like verb agreement, punctuation, and pronoun references. Students, however, weren't so thrilled with the extra attention given their writing; thus, there was a problem that hung on like a headache, all caused by that painful thing called "composition."

Some college-bound students overlook important art skills essential to well-rounded lives

Caught up in a world where class enrollments could spell the difference between having jobs or not, art teachers wrestled with the problem of why most college-bound students stayed away from art classes. For years, the school had a large enough art enrollment to justify having 4 art teachers; this year there were only enough students for 3 teachers, and the number of those students who were expected to go on to further schooling was believed to be small. The emphasis on being prepared for either a vocational school or a college program caused many students to shun courses like art that did not give them training in areas that would someday help them earn a living. For many, art was viewed as being a creative exercise that doesn't teach practical skills that could someday be applied to a job. Teachers tried to communicate the idea that while art skills and an appreciation of the arts might not help a person get a job, they are still important parts of an educated person's life. Art is a form of expression that helps to round out a person's world, just as music and the theater do. Those students who did take art were encouraged to display their works in the school's main showcase, not only to let others see what they'd been making, but also to give other students some exposure to art processes. What frustrated and baffled art teachers was the fact that response to art fairs beyond the school was exceptionally strong; the teachers themselves all sold many works during the year. The public seemed more interested than ever in having artwork in their homes, yet too few parents saw the value of their children taking the only free art courses they'll ever be offered.

Movies, filmstrips, maps, video tapes, worksheets, small-group discussions . . . Social Studies students found themselves plowing relentlessly through a seemingly endless sequence of learning exercises. The scarcity of practical experiences in most classes was restrictive to the learning process. Another handicap was the lack of money in the budget for field trips. There was some relief from the tedious progression of topics, though. Juniors got a chance to express their creativity through the construction of sometimes elaborate extra credit projects. Students in senior Social Studies classes showed that they were able to put into practice some of what they learned in class. After an in-class panel discussion involving Bloomington School Board members, principals, and parents, a large group of students was prompted to attend a School Board meeting in order to challenge a board policy on field trips.

Science, math stress the practical

Emphasis in the science and math departments shifted from theory and advanced college preparation to the understanding of practical concepts and applications. Along with adopting more practical texts in both departments, instructors added different activities like duck banding, physical fitness testing, and computer programming to spark student interest. As a result of that greater interest and feeling for their subjects, the increased number of Kennedy students enrolled in math and science courses absorbed more lasting knowledge. The math department found it difficult to include as many of these special activities in their program because of a less flexible sequence of more abstract ideas. One of the major problems faced by the science department was caused by a large number of incoming sophomores deciding that they could afford to miss a year of science. Then, in their junior year, when they found that they needed more background in science for college, they would have to double up on science courses or omit some completely. Another problem was experienced by the biology classes when the School Board cancelled all extended field trips.

The predictions:

Counselor Ann Miller is astounded as she looks into her crystal ball to see a future for Tom Colbert. Tom's life is so confusing that the magical, mystical teller of the future gives out several conflicting predictions. What will become of Tom? Here's what the seer says:

"You obviously have some highly developed skills for taking things apart, Tom. I think I can foresee an amusing career for you in the demolition and wrecking business, especially when you begin to consider the satisfaction you could get from a life of benevolent destruction. It may seem to be a little bit tiring at first, but after tearing apart 6 buildings in 6 days, you'll be able to feel a real sense of accomplishment."

"According to some of your background information, Tom, you have frequently demonstrated interest in food or food related careers. I can visualize you having a fascinating occupation making French fries and filling ketchup bottles behind a Walgreens lunch counter. The starting salary might not be too impressive, but the work's not very strenuous and you'll never have to worry about going hungry."

"It looks like you'll have to get a job where high test scores aren't the main consideration for hiring. Maybe you should consider your muscles as your main asset. If they are, then the prospects in the sanitation business certainly seem promising. There isn't a whole lot of glamour attached to the job, but you should think of the bright side: the pay is pretty reasonable and a garbage man gets to keep whatever he finds."

"Maybe what you need is a little bit of solitude since it appears that you have problems when it comes to interacting with groups of people. In that case, getting a job where there aren't many people would probably be very good for you not to mention how happy it would make the other people. Perhaps something like manning a weather station at the South Pole or guarding an oil pipeline in the Gobi Desert would be best."

School was a never-ending cycle of confusion.

In the midst of this chaos, students turned toward counselors for guidance. Counselors provided college descriptions, scholarship information, and advice as to which college entrance tests to take. Along with these things the counselors wrote recommendations for jobs, predictions:

Student Thomas Colbert 1968- 1969
18--27 Week Summary of Progress

I am pleased to inform you that Tom is making some progress in changing his domineering attitude toward his peers during group discussions. In fact, we no longer find it necessary to restrain him with a strait jacket. Tom still has problems with his almost continuous need for food though. After volunteering to be lunch line captain, Tom began extorting peanut butter sandwiches and apples from some of the children in exchange for "protection". I'm afraid this problem extends even further too. Class study periods are often disrupted by the sounds of crackling potato chips and banging pop cans coming from Tom's desk. I am prevented by time and space limitations from going into any more of his recent exploits, but I can assure you that if the situation is not rectified soon, I will be forced to take drastic measures.

work experience programs, and scholarships. Serious attendance, personality, family, and chemical dependency problems were also taken care of by counselors. While counselors helped students to identify their alternatives, the final decision as to which course of action to follow had to be chosen by the student.

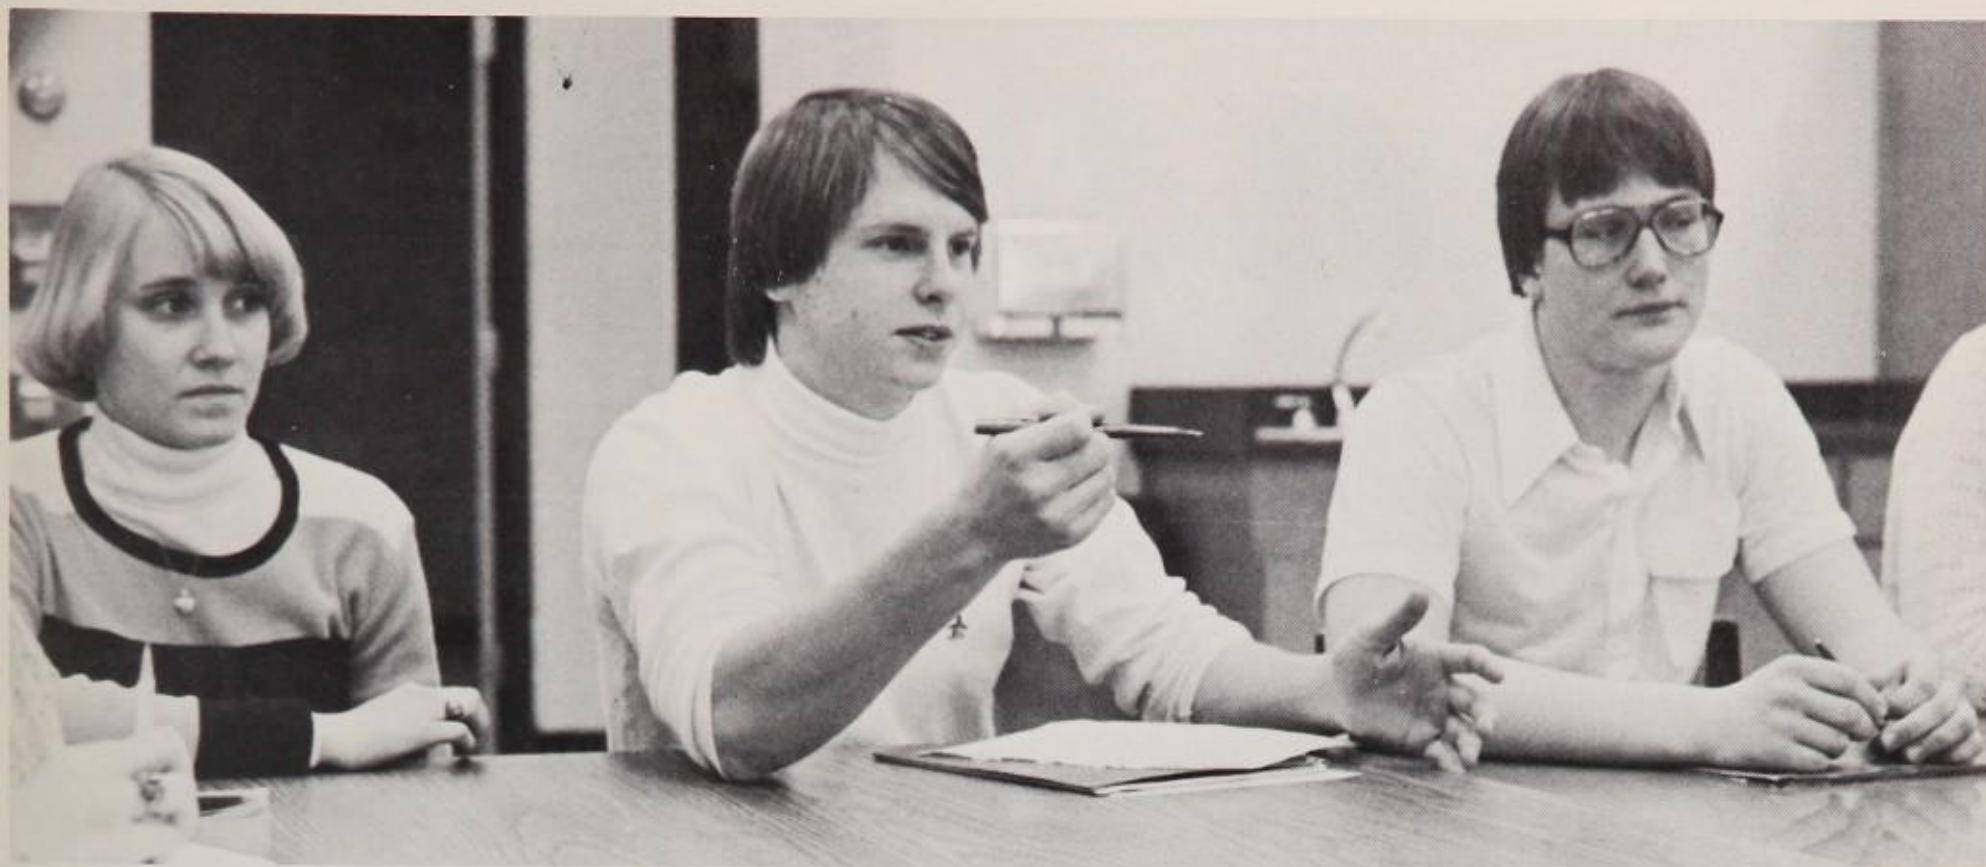

The final product:

Building wrecker and demolition expert? Garbage man? Cook? Weather station operator? No, these occupations were too challenging for Tom. Being basically lazy, Tom chose to take the less complicated path and become a surgeon. And what does the University of Minnesota Medical School think about this? Well in this era of declining enrollments, not even the Department of Surgery can afford to pick and choose.

ORGANIZATIONS

Government finds student body lacking in support

Socially, the Student Government became a success. An ice cream social during halftime of a February basketball game proved to be more popular than the game itself. Practically, however, the 17 government members found themselves without tangible results. Though they had been elected by their classmates, they soon found themselves to be lacking anything close to a mandate for action. Members were successful in fighting the battle of sour milk in the cafeteria, though on the issue of a designated smoking area nothing happened beyond hours of arguing.

PAGE 74 — Top: As a member of the Varsity Band, Mary Kass, a sophomore, learns that it is necessary to budget her time wisely in order to become actively involved in such activities as girls' gymnastics and the newly formed girls' soccer team. Right: Junior Steve Challeen, a member of the Wind Ensemble, finds that participating in Marching Band and cross country skiing, along with the many other activities offered, can be very enjoyable — but also time consuming. PAGE 75 — Right: Becoming actively involved in the many band activities that arise during the year presents a problem for sophomore Lisa Lindgren, a member of the Concert Band, who finds it essential to divide her time spent in band enthusiastically cheering for numerous Kennedy athletic events throughout the year, and holding down a steady job at Burger King working 20 to 25 hours per week.

September 6 the war began. It wasn't the regular kind of war, one in which opposing armies fought raging battles to control an area of land. This was one of a more subtle nature, for it was a war in which the prize was control of students' free time. Members of the bands found themselves being attacked from all sides by conflicting activities. On the one hand, Director Thomas Peck longed for band members who would dedicate themselves to band activities outside of the 1-hour class period. This meant that rehearsals and performances would hopefully take precedence over participation in athletics, cheerleading, Kolleens, publications, or jobs. What Mr. Peck soon discovered, however, was that band students were among the most active in school. To expect that they would put band activities ahead of playing in a soccer game, working on a yearbook deadline, cheering for a school team, or working at Burger King proved to be an impossible dream. The show would go on — it always did — but often without many band members, for theirs was a war of priorities in which band often was the loser.

Participation in outside band activities dwindles as members battle activities of a third kind

Absence of band unity discourages members

Lack of responsibility and team unity on the part of many band members led Director Thomas Peck to cancel the bands' trip to the Rocky Mountains. Those who had worked hard selling fruit and cheese in the band's fund raising project felt that their efforts and extra time spent to make the sale a success had been in vain. Though they turned their interests toward playing in solo and ensemble competition, many band members were left feeling let down by band experiences that had involved concerts with small audiences, pep bands with few willing participants, and a spring without an annual trip.

Band's spirit overcomes rainy forecasts

While trudging through mud and rain may have dampened the uniforms of Marching Band members, the group's enthusiasm remained high. Weather forecasts promised rain for nearly every Friday night all fall, and for once the forecasts were correct. As a result, 2 of 4 shows scheduled for home football games had to be cancelled, causing some members to think all their practice time had been wasted. Due to the football team using Kennedy field, the band's practices after school became a little more tiring and time consuming because members had to make a short march to the Riverside Park, their new practice site. Their rehearsals gave residents in the area a free concert. Support from parents continued to be strong, as adults sponsored an ice cream social and a potluck dinner before an October show. That show, actually the one planned for the rained-out evening of Homecoming, included a fireworks display that provided a noisy, colorful conclusion to the performance. Even though half of the Kennedy shows had to be scrapped, members were able to show off marching and playing skills when they performed at the Homecoming games at Gustavus Adolphus and St. Olaf Colleges. Once the football season was over, the band turned its attention to its annual fall indoor concert. Again the size of the audience disappointed the group, for the auditorium seats held only parents and a few students.

Students get 'fever' for active group participation; interests in choir activities begin to . . . decline

There was a time when the lure of the choir's spring trips was enough to keep members involved in every choir activity, whether participation meant showing up during the evening hours for rehearsals for the Holiday Show or Pop Concert, painting sets or spending afternoons out on the streets selling pizzas, candy, or just about anything else that would bring in a profit for the choir fund. But that was in other years, years in which the competition for choir members' time wasn't as extreme. This year Director James Bontrager learned the hard way that he could not count on anything close to total participation in projects that the groups took on. While nearly all members' hands would pop up when asked if they would be present for concerts or various sales drives, actual participation was something else again. Whether they were busy working at jobs, or they were content to be lazy at home, many members simply did not feel enough of a commitment to the groups' activities, even if group success meant money for the only thing that everyone showed up for: the all-important spring trip.

PAGE 80 — Left: Sophomore Sharon Hacker, a member of the Sensations Choir, spends much of her spare time cheerleading but allows herself some time to hold down a part-time job at Burger King. James Bontrager, tour director or choir director? Members of Concert Choir, Variations, and Sensations soon learned that he could claim both titles. Right from the beginning choir students recognized that they had 2 major goals: to produce musically balanced, visually entertaining shows and to earn enough money to pay for the trips they wanted to take in the spring. Class time and extra rehearsals were aimed at getting the choirs ready for their Homecoming performance, the Holiday Show, the Pop Concert, and '50s Day as well as for other shows in the community. Always lurking in the background was choir members' attention to fund raising, for they knew that musical talent alone would not be enough to get them to Corpus Christi, Texas (for Concert Choir) or to Cragun's Resort in Minnesota (for Variations and Sensations). Choir parents did their part by selling Christmas trees, while students took on the challenge of selling pizza, jewelry, candy, candles, and Fuller brush products. Choir students' sponsorship of a dance called Friday Night Fever provided a takeoff on a current movie and an alternative to dancing at the Eagan Discotrec. The trip times arrived, and Mr. Bontrager's travel directions proved to be just as effective as his choral instructions.

JBs earn applause as professional performers

Perhaps more than any other school group the JB Singers carried a reputation as being professionals. While still classified as student performers, JB members earned pay for their approximately 60 shows, pay which found its way into the choir fund. In addition to the satisfaction the JB's felt when performing at national conventions, country clubs, or workshops, members knew that their earnings would help finance the whole choir's spring trip to Texas. What gave the group its professional look and sound was the sense of timing and vocal coordination that was developed during practice sessions that stretched back into the previous summer. Musical routines moved into the Bluegrass or country sound more and more. Audience response was especially strong for Scott Pearson's version of "Boogie Woogie Country Man." Cooperating with each other while learning new choreography and songs, JB members became not only friends, but also musical professionals who loved to step into the spotlight and hear the applause of the audiences.

Orchestra strives for recognition as a group

What orchestra members dreamed of the most was an identity for their group, even if that group included only 28 students. Giving them an identity would be a concert that would be theirs alone. Instead, orchestra members found themselves always in the position of accompanying other groups. Their dream of a concert remained but a dream as they continued to be the group others looked to when they needed a musical shoulder to lean on.

What kept Advisors Linda Lee and Concepcion Morgan enthused about working with the Language Club was their belief that club activities would increase student interest in foreign language study. That goal was met to some extent when members met to carve pumpkins on Halloween, to share international specialties at a buffet dinner, and to compete in a gingerbread house contest. Since only 22 members took part, the language program was just slightly affected.

Promotion of language study found in activities

Danceline involved in tug-of-war

Sometimes they felt they were being pulled from all directions, like a balloon that is claimed by two children at the same time. Kolleens knew what it meant to be under pressure, for pressure was a built-in part of their lives. Twice-a-day practices prior to major competitions, as well as tense rehearsals before games and pepfests, put a strain on the girls' schedules. In addition to their obligations to the danceline, the girls faced the problems of homework, besides fulfillment of their other obligations to jobs and activities. Always watching over the Kolleens was Advisor Pat Fatchett, who was not only their constant critic, but always their devoted fan. She looked on with much pride as the Kolleens finished with high placings in the Fridley Invitational, St. Paul Winter Carnival competition, as well as the State Danceline Competition. When their activities were over, the girls learned to deal with pressure, even when at times it seemed they were about to be pulled apart by all the people and problems that constantly tugged at them throughout the school year.

A-Squad cheers with enthusiasm

While molding their lives around the activities they enhanced, cheerleaders found excitement and satisfaction that not even small crowds and uninspired students at pepfests could destroy. A lack of major team sport success, outside of varsity wrestling, was largely responsible for poor crowd turnouts at most varsity games and meets, and the few fans that managed to attend were apathetic about cheers being performed. When they did decide to yell, fans mostly chose their own chants as they ignored the leadership of the cheerleaders. Probably the girls' biggest success came at the Homecoming pepfest. Fan response to the banana eating contest and the group's various skits was excellent. Whether planning pepfests, Spirit Week or the '50s dance, or cheering for any of 14 sports, or making food for famished athletes, cheerleaders built their school lives around the athletic program. The fact that fan response was slight did not prevent them from feeling a special pride at being the school's designated bearers of the blue and gold.

B-Squad deals with its major obligations

Being a B-Squad cheerleader meant coming to grips with reality in a way the 8 girls had not anticipated. At first, the job seemed easy; all they would do would cheer at a few games and pepfests and be seen by a lot of people — or so they thought. Once the school year began, they realized that being a cheerleader was a 2-way street. The hours of practicing and cheering at games at least 2 nights a week soon taught them that they indeed had taken on a major obligation.

Students in KTAV find depth in television

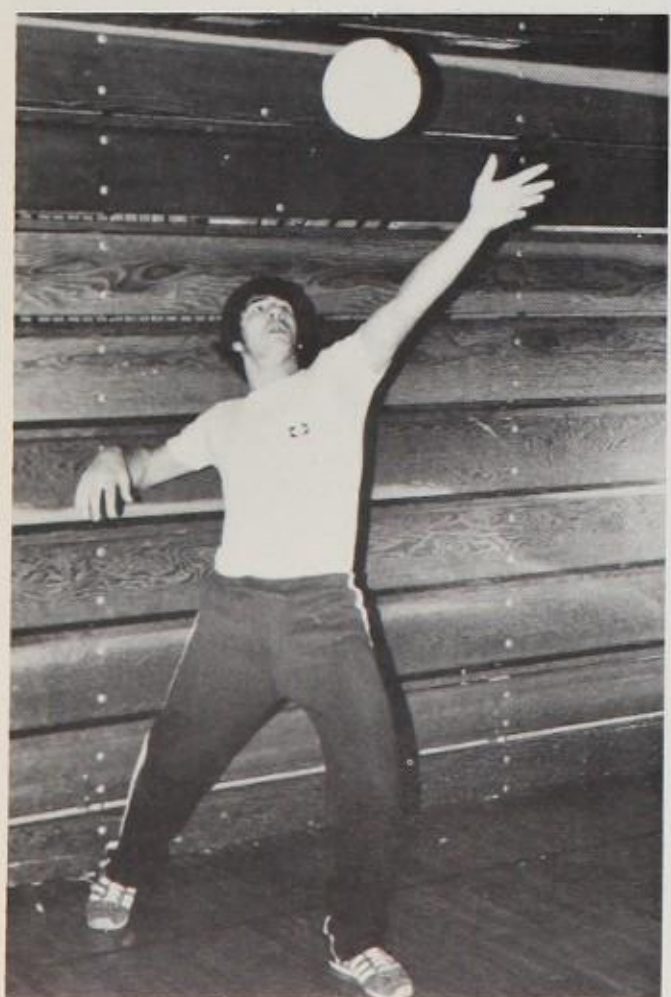

Radio and television provided entertainment for most students during otherwise uneventful evenings, but for KTAV students the media offered an introduction to possible careers. KTAV crews filmed sports events and musical shows in addition to spending long hours producing weekly TV programs for cable television. They also prepared radio shows to entertain classmates during their lunch periods in the cafeteria, while still finding time to help teachers set up audio-visual equipment for classroom use. Their special knowledge of media operations made radio and television more than just things that could break up a boring evening at home.

enjoyment

Would-be varsity athletes found an escape from the routine of daily practices and the $10 user's fee when they opted to take part in the intramural program. Those who participated in IM football risked personal injury during rugged games. Volleyball jocks, meanwhile, showed their agility by getting themselves entangled in the net. Six o'clock in the morning proved to be a convenient time for IM basketball games; after all, couldn't players rest up during first hour naps? Broomball players sacrificed their beautiful legs in order to have the privilege of watching their opponents writhe in agony when they got smashed into the boards. While the last traces of snow were still on the outdoor fields, softball enthusiasts found their new grey sweat pants getting coated with spring mud when they attempted to slide into base. Proving their overall athletic superiority were The Seniors, headed by Kent Hrbek, as the team managed to win 3 championships, versus a single championship for the Faculty Freaks. That team found its inspiration in the play of teacher John Beck, known as the "Swooper." Coordinating the program was phy. ed. teacher Mary Jo Hendrickson, who managed to escape being sued by would-be jocks who sustained an amazing variety of injuries during their amazing activities.

Achievers strive for knowledge, involvement

Learning how to run a small business and cooperating with one another were two main objectives accomplished by Junior Achievement members this year. Kennedy's JA program, which was the largest in the metropolitan area, involved approximately 80 sophomore, junior, and senior students. Not only did members gain knowledge of business practices, but they also received a semester's credit for their participation during the 6 month program.

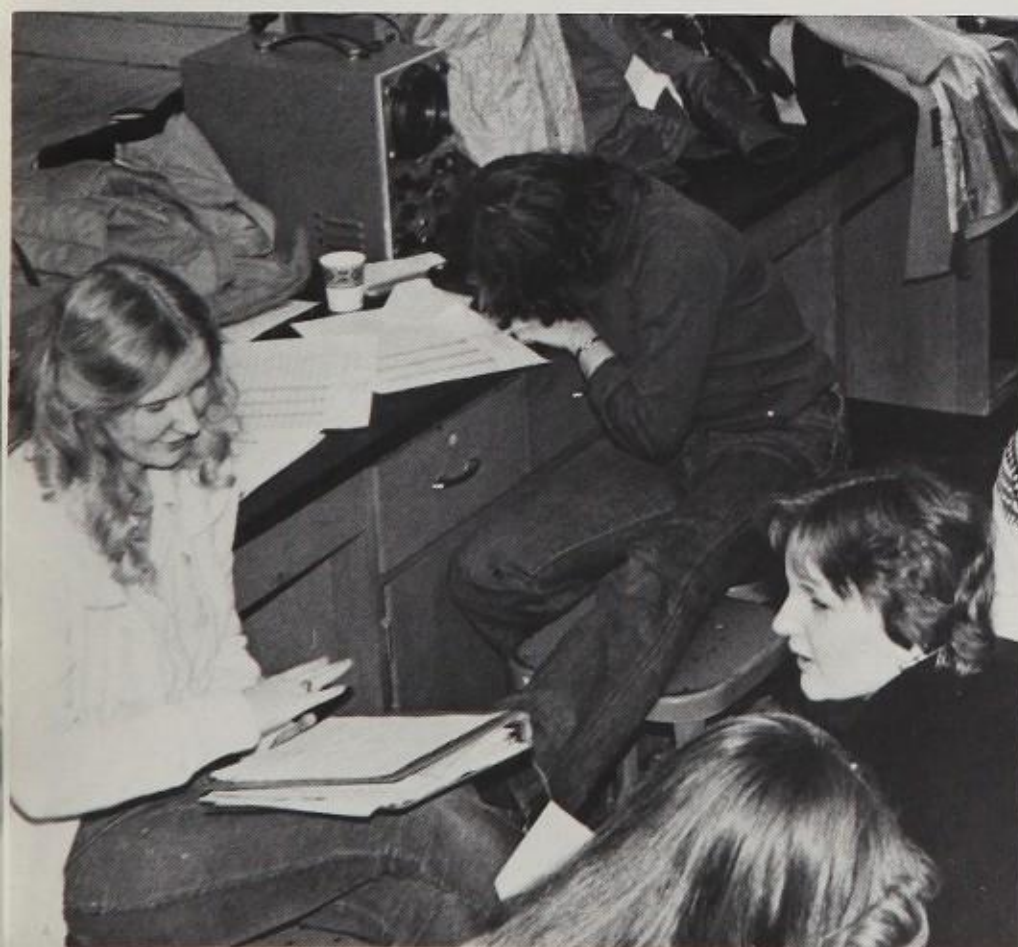

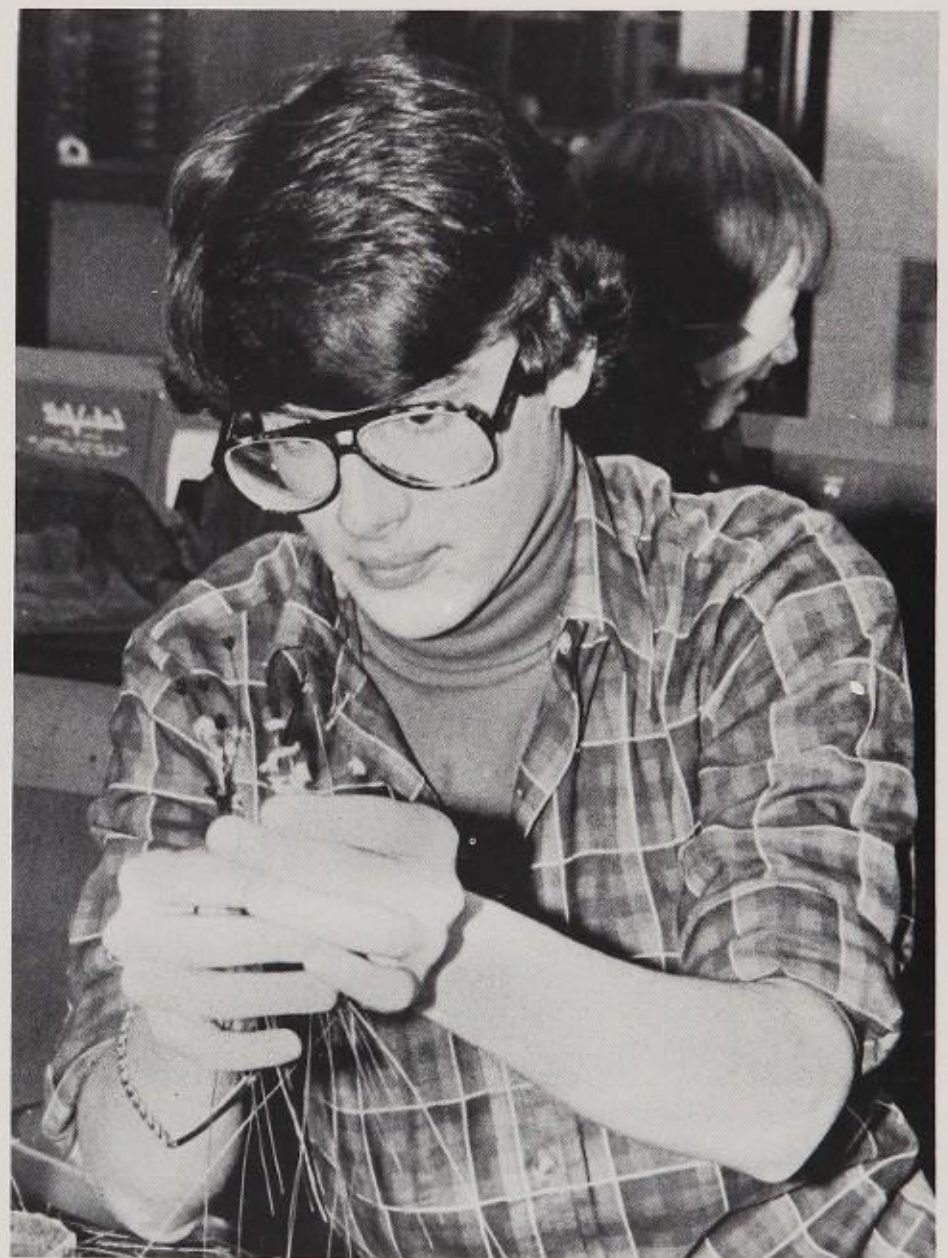

Individual companies raised money by selling products which they made, such as key chains, popcorn salt, memo pads, trouble lights, and Halloween insurance. One losing venture, the sponsorship of the January Winter Formal dance, was costly for JA members. In April, the companies "liquidated," which meant they turned their total assets into money. JA companies paid taxes as would any business. Members agreed that it was not only the semester's credit that attracted them to the JA program, but also the chance to work with others while gaining business experience. Many members felt that company and personal goals were reached by the year's end. They had participated in a learning experience while still enjoying themselves. The time put into the program really paid off in April's monetary dividends.

Youth For Understanding, Brazil.
I came to Minnesota in the fall, and I fell in love with this place. Everything has been so neat here. The leaves fall off the trees and the snow comes. That's fantastic! I learned a lot from American customs and there is nothing like spending several months in a foreign country. This experience has been very meaningful. I am grateful for the Youth For Understanding Program and for my new family, who is so nice. I thought I would miss home by now, but today I know that there was nothing to be afraid of. It is wonderful to see how friendly some people can be. It was really fun to go skiing and snowmobiling, even when I knew it was a hundred degrees warmer back home. I met a lot of very nice people this year. I went ice fishing and teepeeing. I made so many friends, who I'll never forget. Thanks Kennedy, I had a great time!

AFS finally gains needed support from student body

Establishing itself as a group with an identity and quality all its own, the AFS Club proved to be a marked contrast with AFS groups of previous years. Active membership more than doubled, largely because of the influence of an especially outgoing exchange student, Takahiro Tsu. Members took in foreign students from other programs, in addition to Takahiro, as the group planned and carried out a full range of social activities.

Takahiro Tsu

American Field Service, (AFS), Japan. Studying abroad has been my long cherished dream since I began studying English about six years ago. AFS gave me the chance to learn many kinds of things through life in the United States. When I arrived, I was received warmly as a member of the family, whom I love. From the first day of school everybody made me feel like a part of Kennedy. I have two major reasons why I wanted to become an AFS student. One reason is that I like to grasp the wide range of view which we could only get through the life in another country. AFS provides a dramatic opportunity to learn through personal experience by bringing people to people. I believe this simple act opens a channel for learning and communication across cultural barriers that is essential in our increasingly interdependent world. The second reason is that I'd like to look into my country as well as myself, from a different point of view. Because I think it is important to know ourselves and this is the step to understanding other people. Finally, I would like to thank all of the teachers and students who made this year special. I am sure I will take back a more mature self and new insights that will open doors for the future. I really appreciate this opportunity that AFS gave me.

American Scandinavian program, Finland. Dear Kennedy, I want to give my thanks to all the people who helped me start my school year here in the United States. In the beginning, it was difficult to find my way around the school. I got lost seven times on my first day. Now that I know my way around, I really like the school, its students and teachers. I am glad I joined the swim team, it gave me a chance to meet new friends and to experience the team sports at a school. I think you young Americans should be proud of your school system. In Finland, we spend the whole school year in one class, with the same people. The good point of this is that we get to know each other very well. The bad point is that we do not get to choose the classes that we want or are interested in. The family that I am staying with is a little bit different from the average American family that they would usually choose in the exchange program. First of all, I am the only child in the house. Second, my dad is working in Dallas, Texas, and is not home much. In our home there is only my mom, me, and the dogs. I have gotten along extremely well with my family and haven't felt lonely without brothers and sisters. When I go back, I hope that you all write to me and tell me what's going on here at Kennedy High School. I am very interested to find out. I'll surely be back someday. Thank you all very much!

Profilers measure their talents

Capturing the year's events, while recreating the emotions that made them worth remembering, Profiles staff members found themselves in a battle with creativity. The 46 members soon experienced what true dedication meant when trying to uphold the traditions of the state's No. 1 rated yearbook. They looked at last year's stack of contest awards, then at their own work, and soon realized that 1 hour a day did not give them enough time to produce the photos, layouts, and copy of the quality expected of them. Working together as a unit became essential, as members learned to rely on each other for help at every level. The 9 months of work did not go by without difficulty, however. Problems with photography, disagreements on approaches to coverage, and procrastination on the part of some members all added up to major deadline evening headaches. Standards of perfection were enforced by Co-Editors Beth Bauer and Larry Schlichting, however, and in the end the hassles that are an inevitable part of yearbook production faded away when staffers saw their work molded into 248 pages of excellence.

Torchers struggle to overcome obstacles

Right from the first issue on, Torch staffers realized that they had 2 major obstacles which they would have to overcome. The first was the clock, as all Torch staffers found themselves pushing at the last minute to rewrite their stories, finish complicated pasteups of pages, or reshoot photographs. Their other major battle was with the publication's reputation, for Torch members knew that they were expected to keep up the Torch's All-American national rating and state rating as Minnesota's No. 1 newsmagazine. To do this would take hours of hard work and extra time during long afternoon and evening hours. That sacrifice was made by Editor Glen Broemer and his section editors, who in turn were able to get some members enthused about working on in-depth stories that would be meaningful to student readers. What caused problems for those students who did care about Torch quality were other staff members for whom socializing was most important. While Glen and other editors believed that all staffers had the talents necessary to produce the kind of stories and photos they expected, they had a difficult time convincing some students that quality was worth working for. Those who did make the effort to work at interviews and writing found their experiences more than made up for their investment in time. In the end, the greatest obstacle some Torch members had to overcome was the reluctance to get deeply involved with their work.

Low costs, fun attract Ski Club members

Despite low temperatures and strong winds, many Ski Club members headed out to Buck Hill on Wednesday evenings. They found that skiing was not only a great way to relieve the pressures of a tedious school day, but was also a good way to have fun and get some exercise. By paying the $1 membership fee, club members were able to make substantial savings in their quest for winter recreation. They could purchase lift tickets, rent equipment, and get one-way transportation out to the ski hill at a reduced price. Some of the money saved by members who took advantage of the club was channeled into the group trip to Thunder Bay, Ontario. In a time when many prices soared, Ski Club offered a deal too good to refuse.

Rebuilding Chessmen finish as runners-up

When underclassmen answered the call for the school's fourth Chess Team, Advisor Bruce Connell thought the year would be one of rebuilding. Instead, the year was but another in a string of winning seasons. Finishing first in their division, the team went into the league tournament with a 10-0 record. Doug Larson won the Outstanding Player Award while the team placed second.

Inexperienced gridgers keep up hard hitting tradition but suffer closely-fought losses

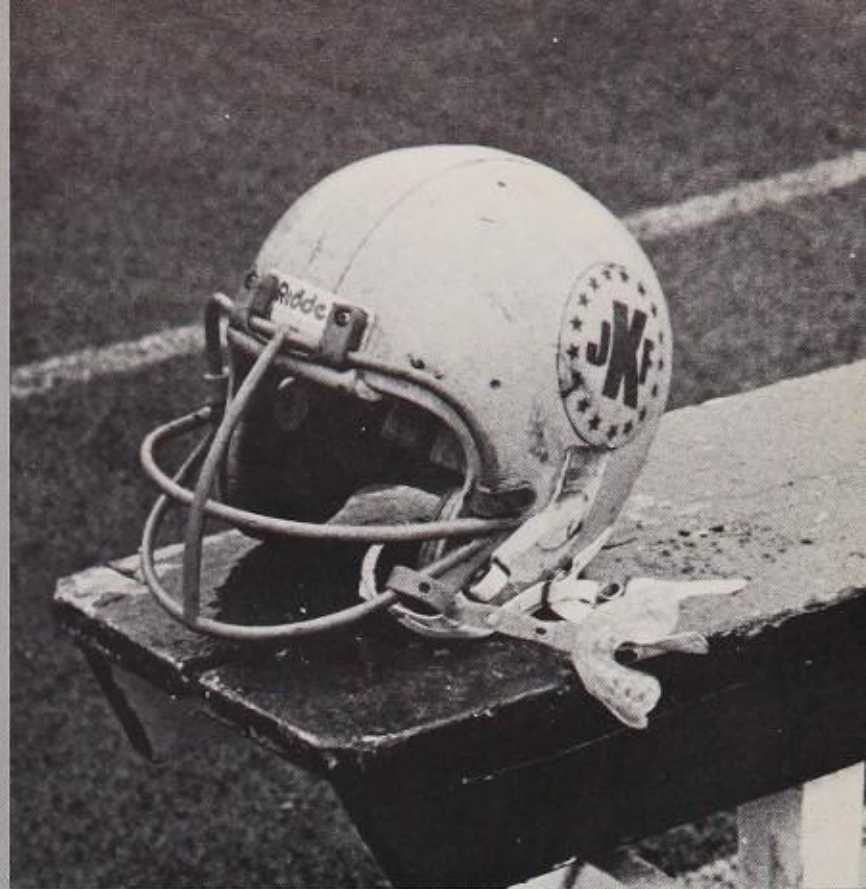

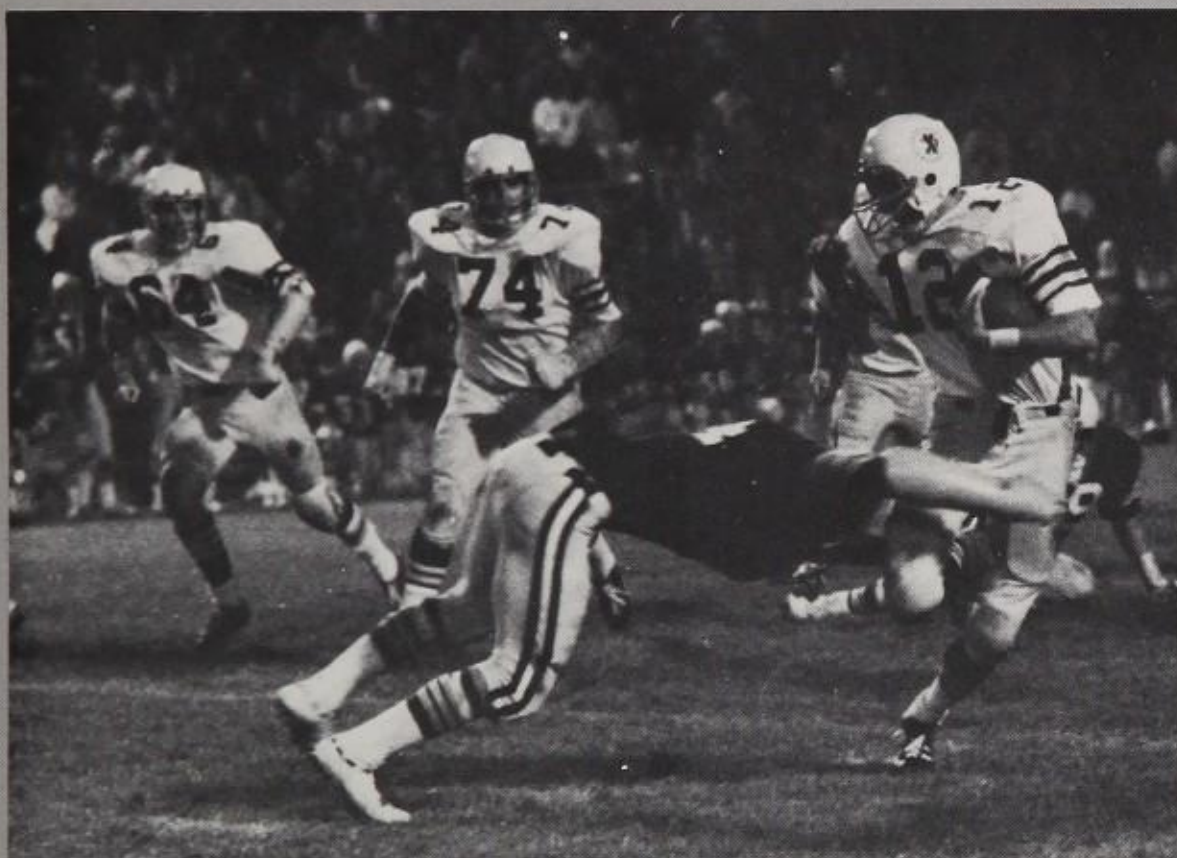

No one — not even the team's most optimistic fans — had reason to expect much more than a 3-6 record from the 1977 football season. His first year as head coach found Mike McKay facing a largely inexperienced offensive squad. Players at virtually every offensive position, including quarterback, lacked the advantage of significant varsity experience. The defense, meanwhile, had only a single player without prior varsity playing time. Stopping the opponents from scoring was only part of the battle, though. McKay knew that for the team to win, the offense would have to gel, and gel very quickly. That seemed to happen in the season's first 2 games when the team overpowered Edina East and Eisenhower. Fans and players alike began to believe that a winning season might be a possibility after all. Then came Lincoln, Fridley, Minnetonka, and Richfield and 4 consecutive losses, 2 in overtime periods. Single big plays in each game marked the difference between a 6-3 record and the losing record that was actually posted. Even during that string of losses the team was able to rebound each Monday for a week of positive practices. Not even a heartbreaking overtime loss to the conference's No. 1 ranked team, Richfield, was able to destroy team confidence. That confidence was shaken, however, during a convincing 26-0 loss to Cooper. Even so, the team was able to come back for a win over Wayzata before collapsing 35-0 to Park Center. That loss at the season's end left a bitter feeling in those players who believed their teammates hadn't played up to their ability. Nevertheless, fans still had seen the team play at least 7 games with full emotion, determination, and enthusiasm.

Individual talent, hard work help football team to look beyond win-loss record to find success

Rainy Friday nights cast a special kind of gloom on the football season, perhaps a gloom that was undeserved. Coach Mike McKay had to watch his team go into the lockerroom more often as losers than as victors, even though in 4 of the team's 6 losses he had felt the boys had performed well. The Eagles' 3 lonely wins caused McKay and the team to have to look beyond the win-loss record to find a measure of success in the season. By the time of the fall football banquet, honors had been awarded that proved that even in losing there had been individual successes in the season. All-Conference honors were awarded to Tri-Captain Geoff Ebeling, a running back who, as the team's leading ground gainer, had averaged 3.8 yards per carry in 126 carries. Junior Chuck Vavrosky earned the same honor for his defensive play. As the team's leading tackler, he made 52 tackles in 8 games. All-Conference, Honorable Mention awards were received by defensive Players Dale Harazin and Tri-Captain Wade Boelter, as well as by offensive lineman Joe Polson. In addition to those awards, which came as a result of conference voting, individuals earned other school awards, even if their 1977 accomplishments did not result in any school records being broken. Sophomore Al Clark averaged 25 yards per catch as the team's leading pass receiver, while Scholar-Athlete award winner Kevin Hoffman, considered by coaches to be 1 of the team's hardest hitters, recorded 25 tackles. Even though he was the smallest defensive tackle in the Lake Conference, Al Puls ranked fourth on the team with 30 tackles. While these achievements gave award winners a feeling of pride, what mattered more to McKay was the team's overall performance, for which the record was only 1 measure.

Volleyball inconsistency results in solid season successes, followed by quick Regional defeat

Suddenly the season was over. A quick loss in the Region opener had abruptly ended what had been one of the volleyball team's finest seasons. Ranked among the state's top 10 contenders at tournament time, the team had worked hard during the season to establish itself as a conference power. The girls' 17-4 record, good for third place in the powerful Lake Red Division, seemed to be the base on which the team could build a State Tournament entry. Wayzata ended all that, however, and the team was left with memories that would go only as far as the regular season. Probably the most significant of those memories would involve the team's victory at their own Kennedy Invitational and their win in 2 games out of 3 over the undefeated Lake Conference leader, Cooper. Providing those wins was an aggressive offense, built around All-Conference Vicki Nelson's setting ability. She shared captains' duties with fellow senior Wendy Godwin, who in her third year on the varsity team had developed the kind of poise and flexibility needed to make her a consistent leader. Kris Schmidt, too, was counted on to provide the kind of serving and net play that was instrumental in bringing victories to the team. These players combined their talents with Sue Godwin, Vicki Braman, Stacey and Sue Peterson to win 9 out of 10 games in mid-season play. The discipline which the team had used to its advantage during the early season somehow faltered as personal conflicts broke out within the team. Just as consistency had made them winners, a lack of consistency brought the team to its quick Regional defeat.

Boys' cross country hurt by seniors' indifference

Lack of senior leadership was a strike against the boys' cross country team that never was overcome. Forced to work with a nucleus of juniors, the squad lacked the experience it needed to have a winning season. What gave the team a feeling of unity was the fact that nearly every runner consistently bettered his times. That wasn't enough, however, to give the team any more than a 2-7 final record.

Obviously, winning couldn't have been everything for girls on the cross country team. Winning just 1 meet, the girls again finished in the Lake cellar. Only 8 girls came out for the team, putting the girls at a distinct disadvantage. Even so, those who were on the team claimed to have enjoyed themselves. They felt pride when the whole team broke the 15-minute mark in Regions, but that still didn't add up to a victory.

Gymnasts return to State Meet

After the State Meet success of the 1976 gymnasts and the loss of key members of that team, few fans would have been surprised if this year's team would have had a less than impressive season. Gymnasts themselves, however, had other ideas about their potential. Right from the first meet on, it became obvious that this was a team capable of surpassing the previous year's success. Regular season meet scores improved weekly as the team reached the point where it was consistently topping last season's record scores. Helping to increase point totals were Scott Alman, Joe Boeser, and All-Conference Don Bartosch. The confident team finished second at the Region Meet with a score high enough to give the Eagles a wild card berth in the State Meet. There it was Bartosch again who led the team, this time to a sixth place finish as he took third place on parallel bars and fourth on the side horse. Only 10 points separated the team from first-place Robbinsdale in a meet that saw Coach Duane Hoecherl's team giving what he called Kennedy's finest performance ever.

Goals met by female gymnasts

When the girls' gymnastics season began, first-year Coach Duane Hoecherl faced a team that was lacking in depth and anything close to a winning tradition. Thus he set 3 goals at the season's start: to win more meets than had previous teams, and increase team depth, and to qualify someone to compete in the Region Meet. As the season progressed, 24 girls maintained positive attitudes that contributed to the team's steady improvement. However, just as things began to gel, injuries ended the season for 2 of the squad's top competitors, Mary Perrier and Joan Moline. While the team's progress slacked off, Hoecherl looked to successes of individuals of overall season growth. Co-Captain Denise Davidson proved to be the most consistent gymnast, and she and Nancy Goodlund became Region finalists. The team posted the best record ever for the sport: 3 wins against 4 losses. At least 2 pre-season goals had been met: the girls had more than 1 win and had sent 2 teammates to Region finals.

For the first 5 years that the school had a soccer team, no one even thought about the team losing. Then came lean years when wins became the exception. It took the 1977 team to return soccer to the winning tradition of the earlier years. Week after week the team's confidence grew as they proved they could play with any team in the state by pounding out unexpected wins over some of Minnesota's most highly-ranked teams, including Sibley, Edina West, and Washburn. While playing nearly 22 different players every game, Coaches Jim Klaseus and Jerry Peterson found themselves working with some of the most talented players they had seen since the days of All-Stater Valdy Hrypa in 1970. Out of an exceptionally skilled group of seniors came All-Conference and All-State honors to John Amato, while Bruce Zilka received Honorable Mention recognition. Facing Regional contests the team looked to its seniors for leadership. After a 2-1 win over Richfield the team faced a grueling 3-2 loss to Lincoln. It took the eventual Region Champs 4 overtimes to defeat this school's most determined, balanced, and successful team since 1972. The team's poise and character showed as it turned away from lean years of losing and returned to the winning attitude of the early 1970's.

Soccermen win back old tradition with good attitude

Girls finish as champs in soccer's first year

When the girls' first soccer season opened, Coach Lynn Aaze hoped to build a respectable team. Realizing that the girls had never experienced interscholastic competition before, she wasn't sure of what the season would bring. Looking back on the team's 9-1-2 record and the Lake Conference championship trophy that the team earned, however, Aaze understood that she had had a part in creating the most successful girls' team since 1975. Co-Captains Jana Massee and Mary Perrier had led a squad that consisted mostly of underclass players. Hard-working and aggressive on the field, the team became an especially close group that earned praise even from the rival Lincoln team for their sportsmanship.

Coming out for the slalom skiing team became a costly way to spend the cold winter. The hardship of practice costs paid by the skiers themselves amounted to $50. Overcoming the odds against them, the boys' slalom team tied for third place. The team's top point getter, Dave Merrick, eventually became the lone State Meet competitor. Cross country, however, couldn't overcome a lacking of skills. Even so, skiers had 1 warm thought: the State Meet entry.

Basketball team looks for scoring balance, consistent play to bring season success

When last year's basketball team finished the season as Region VI champions, players knew they had met their greatest challenge. The dreams of coaches, fans, and team members had become a reality. Trying to match that success this year, however, proved to be a nearly overwhelming challenge for team that could count but a single returnee on its lineup from the 1977 State Tournament team. The problem from the outset was clear:

Coach Steve Strommen had to find players who could play compatibly with Captain Rick Bergien. During the season's early games Bergien proved himself to be the league's top scorer with an average of 22 points per game. While that fact was encouraging, it was painfully obvious that Bergien alone could not consistently win ball games for the Eagles. A lack of team balance in scoring caused the team to have to rely on its defense to hold down opponents' scores while Bergien was left scoring as many as 60 percent of the team's points. The magic combination of players who could share scoring responsibilities eluded the team during the season, as the boys failed to prove that they had the balance and desire to win.

Girl cagers' State hopes shattered

Having 3 starters back for a second year, Coach Dale Welter had dreams of seeing the girls' basketball team in the State Tournament at last. That dream was shattered, however, when No. 2 rated Jefferson defeated the Eagles in the Region semi-final game. During the season the girls had worked hard to post a 13-3 record, with Wendy Godwin earning All-Conference honors for hitting 48 percent of her field goal attempts. She found support in the rebounding and shooting efforts of Cathy Clark and in the playmaking and scoring of Robin Knudson. Not even solid team cooperation could help the Eagles overcome a late-season bout with the flu that affected Region play, however, as Welter's dream of a State bid would have to wait another year.

Wrestlers work their way to first State berth

What may have seemed a trite statement about most high school wrestling teams — "From 98 to Heavyweight, Eagle Wrestlers Really Rate" — proved to be as exact a description as possible of the school's first wrestling team ever to reach State Meet competition. In an unmatched show of team depth, poise, and strategy, wrestlers fought their way to a 21-3 overall record that was good enough to earn them trophies as Lake Red champions, Region 6AA winners, and third place finishers in the State Wrestling Tournament. Never before had Coach Dave Arens worked with as many quality wrestlers in virtually every weight class. He was too close to the situation to realize that the reason the team was so talented and so balanced was largely because of the caliber of coaching the team enjoyed. Arens' 18 years of wrestling activities paid off when he was able to help 5 individuals to qualify for the State Individual Tournament, and then to guide the whole team into the State Team Tournament. He spent sleepless nights wondering how to help each individual to achieve success. Team members, in turn, also spent sleepless nights, though not because of worrying. They were too excited about defeating top-rated teams, in virtually every weight class, from 98 to heavyweight.

As Conference champs and Region winners, wrestlers find team and individual success

Never before had wrestlers known the kind of success they found in this season, but then never before had that sport been packed with as many talented competitors. Setting the tone for the team were Captains Pete Bjerke and Craig Wiklund. Coach Dave Arens called them perfect examples of what captains should be. Their mat successes, as well as those of Dave Wiklund, Brad Tufto, and Chuck Vavrosky, earned those 5 wrestlers All-Conference honors. Those awards provided the boost needed to help all except Bjerke to qualify for the State Individual Meet. Todd Arens qualified for that same meet, while Bjerke and the remainder of the team found their own place at the St. Paul Civic Center when the whole team qualified as Region 6AA champs.

Hockey's wins make believers out of fans

Compared with the obvious successes of other hockey seasons, this year was one of behind-the-scenes growth that may not have always been recognized by fans and sometimes even the players. In November, Coach Jerry Peterson found himself working with a team consisting of players who did not believe in themselves. The usually optimistic coach began developing doubts about his team's chances of ever pulling together into a team that would be able to challenge other hockey powers in the conference. Coach Peterson had known that this would be a rebuilding year for the squad, as only 8 returnees had had previous varsity experience, with just 2 of those having played as sophomores on the varsity. As a result, the coach knew the team would lack the kind of solid player experience that helps a team to handle difficult situations on the ice. What he didn't know, but what he always believed would happen, was that this team would prove its worth by coming together and posting a 14-7 overall record, better than even the most loyal fans might have predicted at the season's beginning. Once they defeated Bemidji in December, players realized they did have talent. They quit second-guessing themselves and set their sights on proving they were part of a winning tradition.

Pucksters overpower best rivals

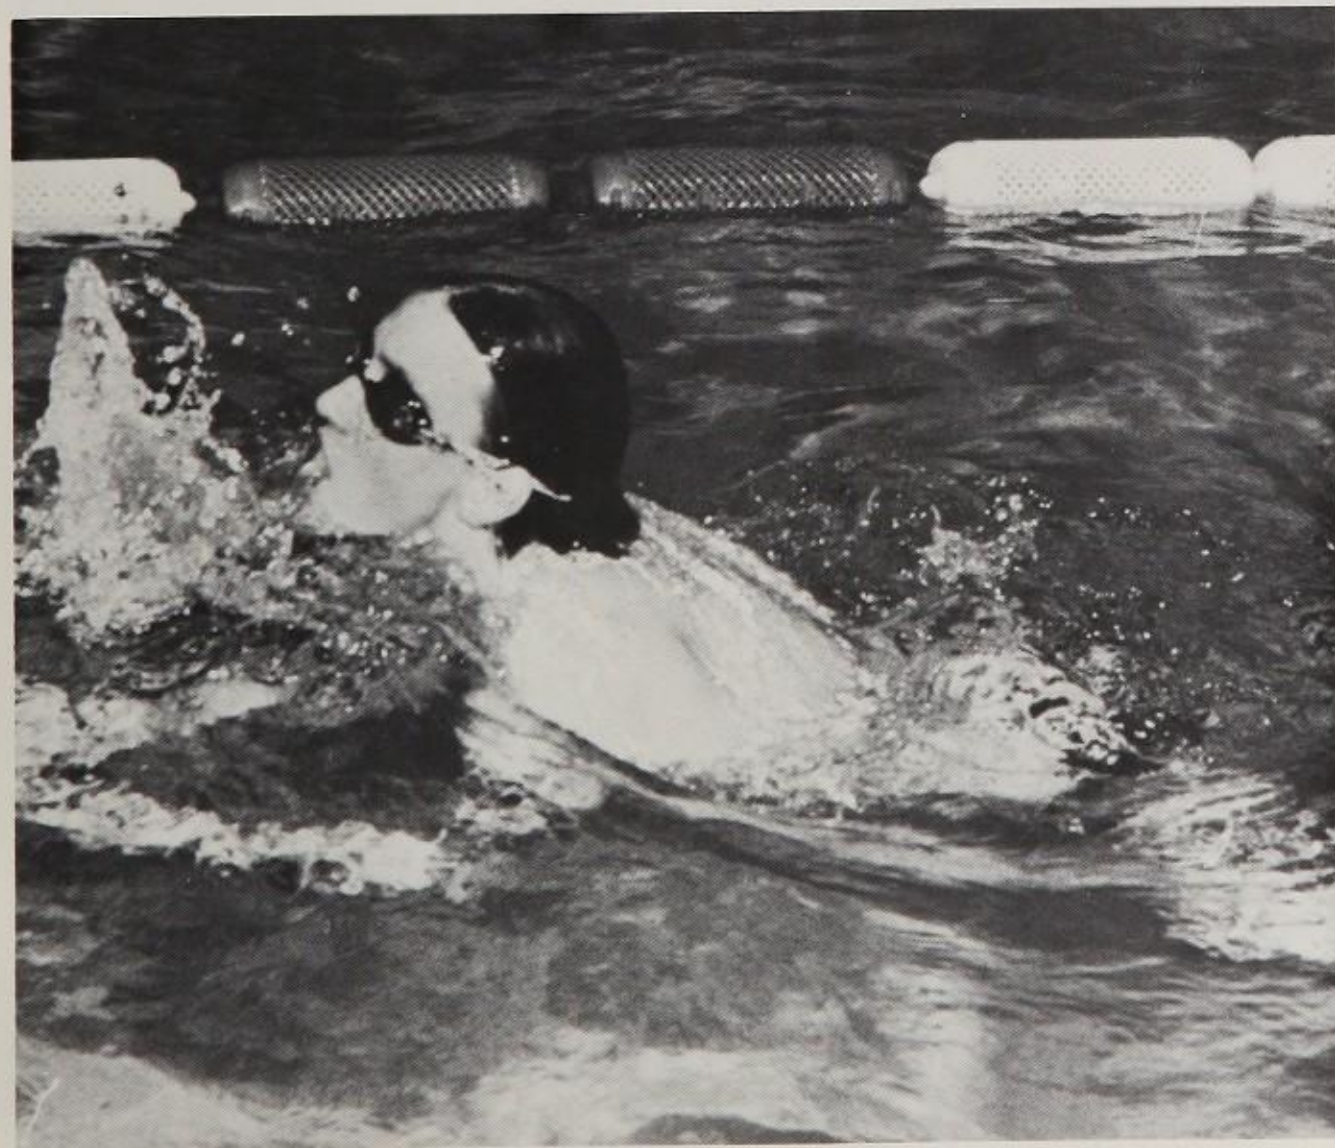

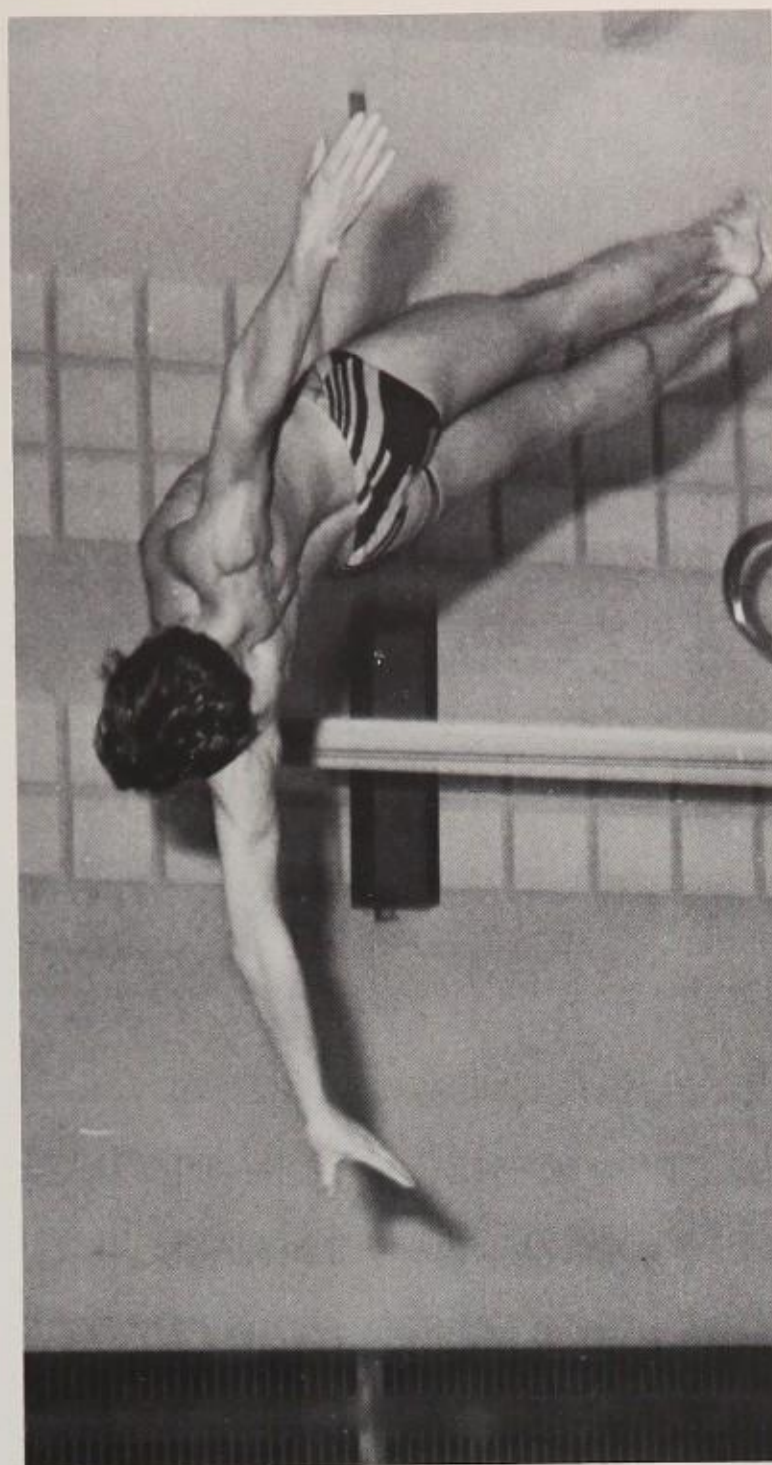

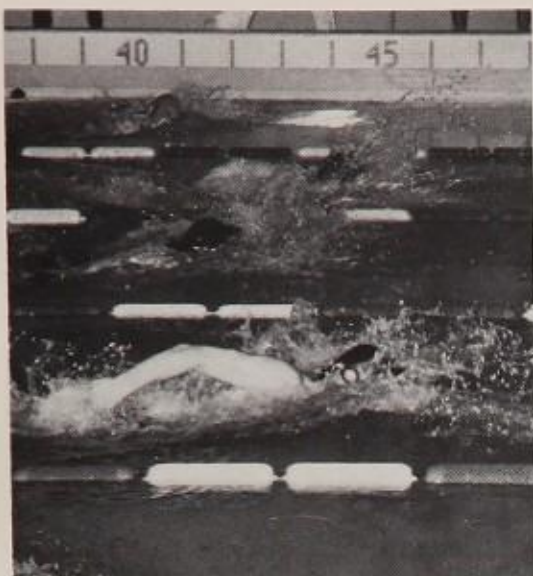

At times, they surprised their fans, but by mid-season hockey players had gotten over surprising themselves when they overpowered major conference rivals. After dominating Richfield 4-1 and Edina West 4-2, the team understood that they could be counted on to give even seventh-rated Jefferson a strong challenge. This they did, and though the score came out 4-3 in Jefferson's favor, Coach Jerry Peterson told his team he had nothing but pride and respect for their performance. Overcoming the obvious handicaps thrust on the team by injuries to such key players as goalie Mike Scherer and center Todd Buelow, the team proved that they had the potential to fight for the conference title. When the Eagles finished second in the Lake Red Division behind top-rated Edina East, the momentum seemed to be there for a strong Sectional bid. Even though State Tourney hopes were cut short by a quick loss to Burnsville, players had shown they had the ability to compete with hockey's best.

Inconsistent swimmers finish sixth

Although his returning squad included a good nucleus of seniors, Coach Bergie Lang did not expect the swimming season to be especially successful. He feared the group would lack consistency, and the up-and-down performances of most swimmers proved him correct. The adrenalin that flowed when the Eagles beat Eisenhower for the first time ever carried the team through 4 more wins. Then came a letdown and a loss to Lincoln, also for the first time ever. Leading the team with consistent high finishes were seniors Steve Phelps and Bob Smith, along with sophomore Paul Mahon and freshman Tim Rannow. At Regions, the team placed sixth, with Phelps and the 200-yard medley relay (consisting of Phelps, Smith, Mahon, and Joel Berglin) breaking school records and qualifying for the State Meet, along with diver Jeff Hollenback. While the season as a whole was not particularly noteworthy, the achievements of those team members did finally assure Lang that this team was stronger than he had expected.

Girl tankers' record times fall short in competition

Competing in a league where most girls on other teams swim all year on AAU teams, Kennedy's swimmers have been at a disadvantage each year. The 1977 season was no exception, as the girls could eke but only 2 wins in 8 meets. Part of the problem has been a lack of continuity in coaching, for the team has had 4 coaches in its 5 years. While Co-Captains Marilyn Gould and Sue Phelps helped build spirit in the team, the group would have been lost without its top swimmer, Finnish exchange student Jaana Huotari. She was an important factor in the breaking of all but 3 school records, even if those records fall far short of records at other schools.

Uncertain at first as to what they were getting into, 22 girls packed their swimsuits and bathing caps last spring and ventured over to the Oak Grove Pool. Answering a call for synchronized swimmers, the group was assured they would differ greatly in purpose from that of the Kennedy Kips of previous years. While Kips used to prepare a single spring synchronized swimming show, this team worked on routines for interscholastic competition. Their lack of experience kept them from being a serious conference competitor. The 1-5-1 record went largely unnoticed, though, for most students didn't even realize the team was in existence.

Swimmers emerge as synchronized competitors

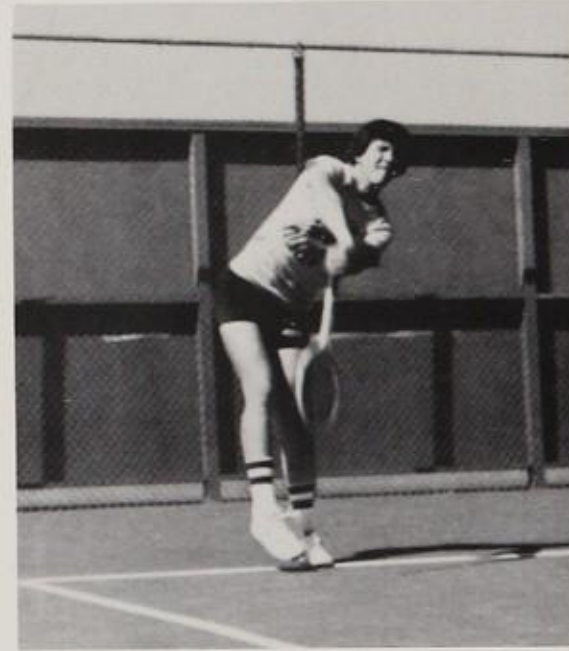

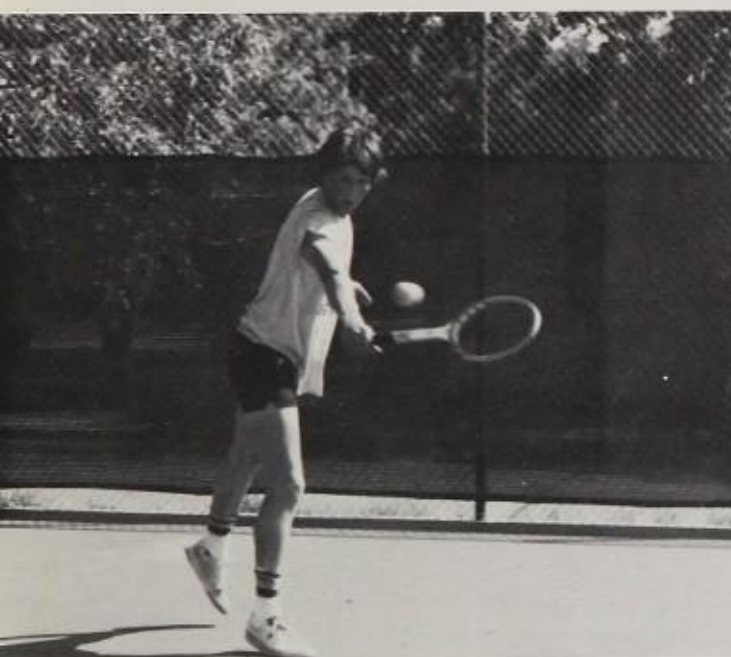

Girl netters experience constant frustrations

Only twice have girls' tennis players had the same coach for consecutive seasons. That may be one reason why the team has never had success in Lake Conference competition. The 0-9 record of the 1977 team was a continuation of a problem 5 years old. If this season's coach, Blake Jaskowiak, stays with the program in the future, the team may have a reason to think they will someday be able to compete with the advanced programs at other Lake schools. While Captain Dana Michel and sophomore Julie Klein posted identical 5-4 individual records, few other girls won enough to understand how it feels to win.

As it turned out, the boys' tennis season was a study in athletic frustration. Coach Bergie Lang's pre-season smiles faded to post-season grimaces as he watched his most experienced team ever win consistently in the regular season, finish in third place — higher than any previous tennis team — and then fall apart in Region play. Losing only 2 games in Lake play, the team had cause to think that a State Tournament berth might at last be theirs. A Region quarterfinal team loss and a Region finals loss in individual doubles killed that hope, however, as the team's best season ended in a fury of frustration.

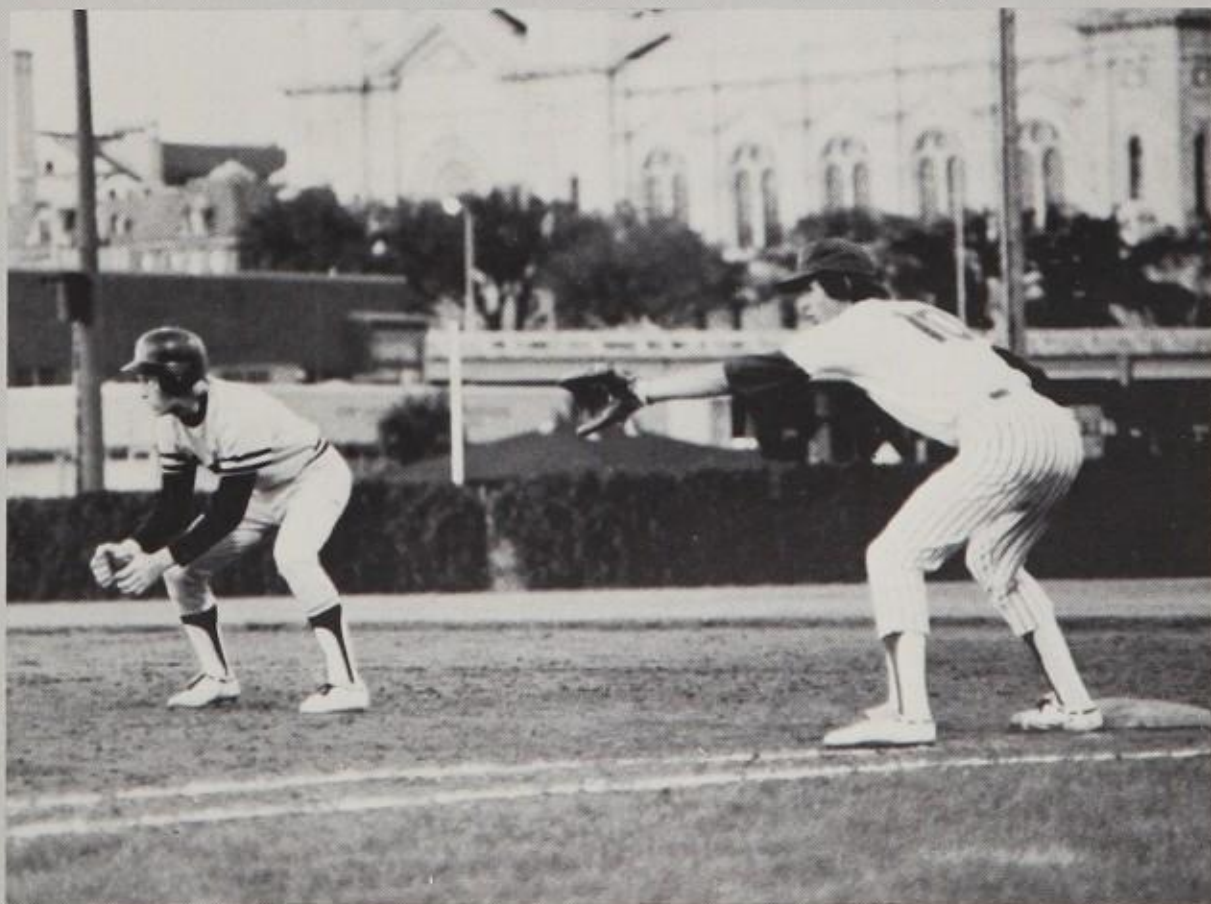

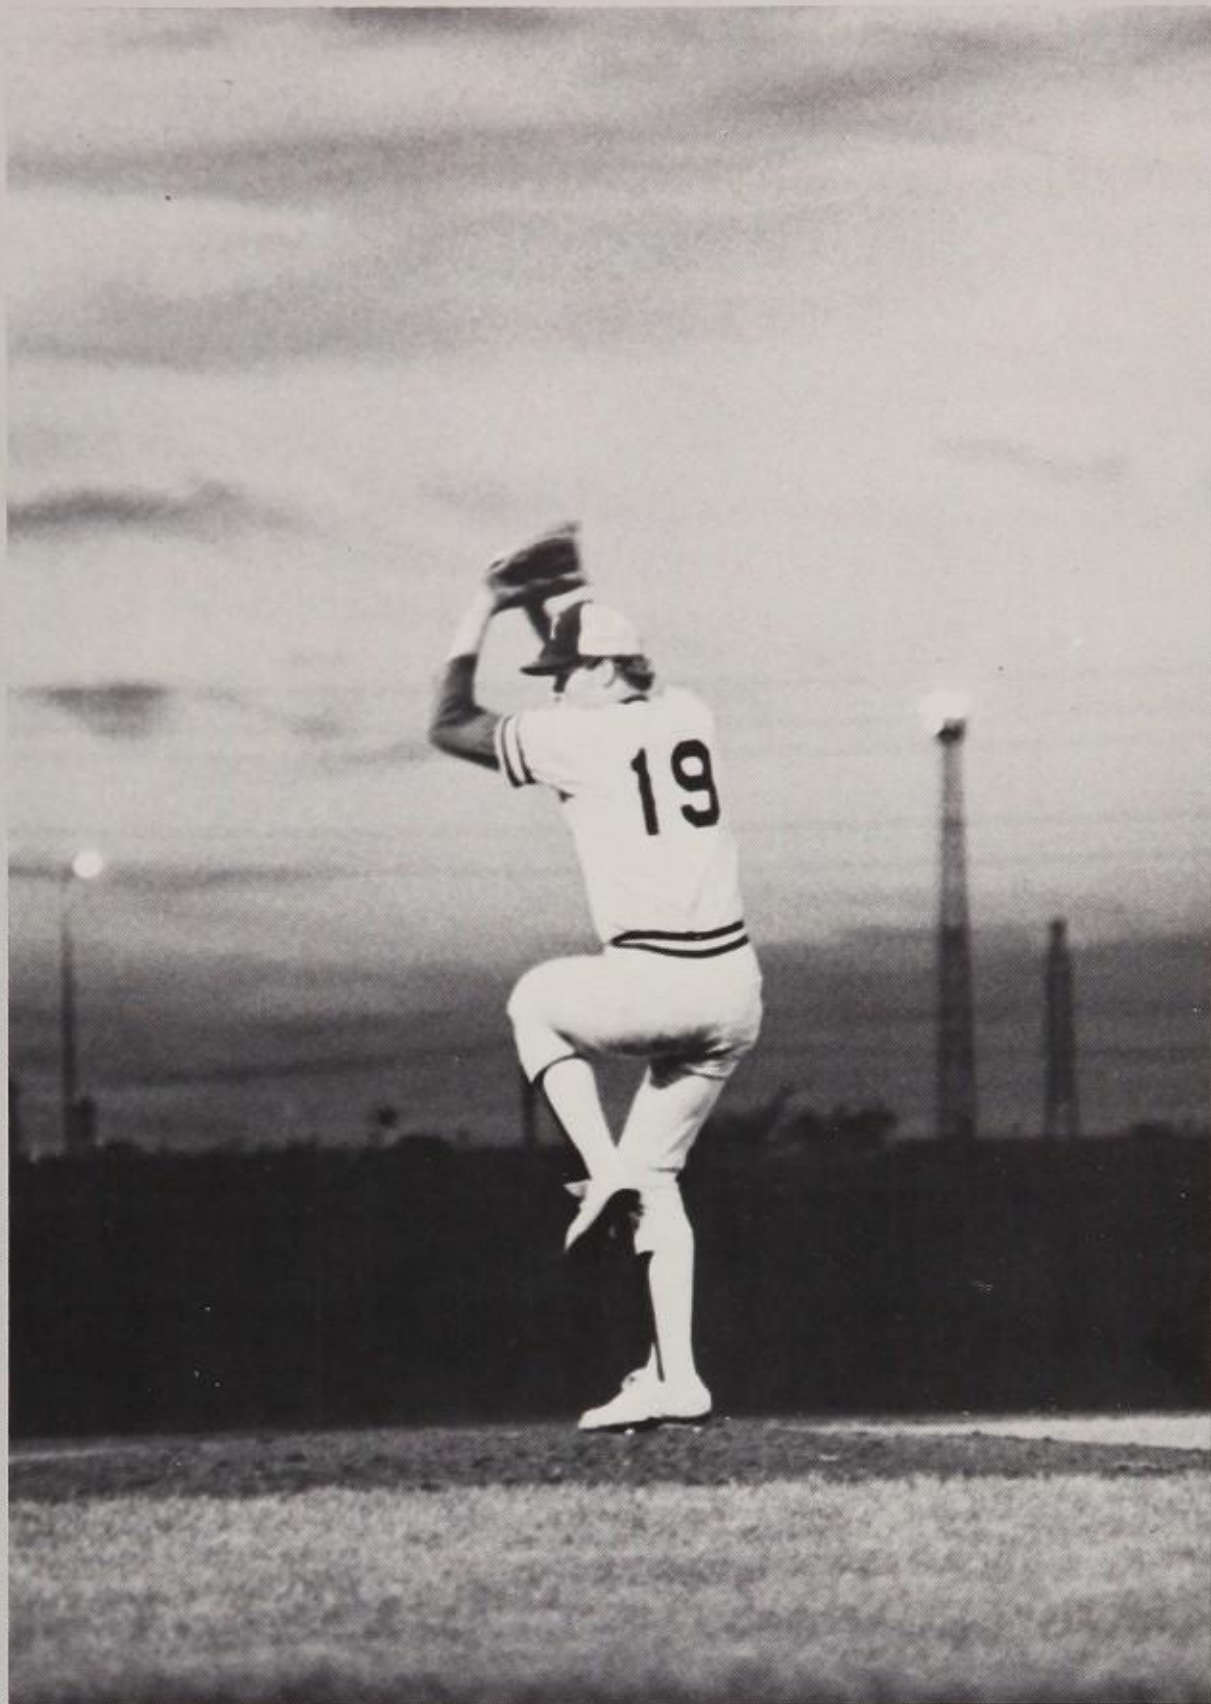

Enthusiastic, experienced netters post winning year

Baseball hits on tradition, winning year

Having the reputation of a winner proved to be a great burden for the 1977 baseball team. With 2 consecutive State Tournament berths behind them, players felt extra pressure to perform well when the season began. That pressure may have been part of the cause of 4 straight losses, 3 by single runs. Finally, solid leadership emerged in the form of hitter Marty Peterson, with a .462 batting average, and pitcher Craig Larson, who pitched 24 innings of consistent shutout baseball. By mid-season the team was able to put together a win streak 5 games long that saw first baseman Kent Hrbek and outfielder Bryan McGroarty picking off runners and getting crucial hits. By the time of Regional playoffs, Coach Buster Radebach felt his team had gelled into a Lake Conference power. His faith in the team's abilities proved well grounded, for the Eagles earned their way to the Region title game. While feeling disappointment in that loss, players still knew they had proven they could be respectable athletes and winners.

Tracksters' season upset by lack of experience

Usually varsity track teams have had an abundance of experienced seniors around which the team is built. To an extent, that was the case with the 1977 team, for pole vaulter Tom Cherrey and runners Mitch Pritchard and John Tabone turned in good scores and provided good examples of leadership for the team. In addition the team took special pride in the State Meet entries of distance runner Bob Jacobson and high jumper Tom Boe. For the most part, though, the team depended on talented underclassmen to bring in meet points. A nucleus of juniors and sophomores helped to please Coaches Mike McKay and Jim Klaseus. In his first year on the team, Henry Jacox rated as potentially the finest quarter-miler ever at Kennedy. He joined the ranks of other underclass standouts, like jumpers John Amato and Dave Knight, discus throwers Rob Amundson and Dennis Callahan. Even so, the team's inexperience showed as meet losses outweighed wins.

Young golfers find winning comes with experience

Experience was the one ingredient lacking in the golf season, causing the team to finish below .500 for the first time in 8 years. Gradually, however, Ken Korsch, Todd Buelow, and Junior High students John Corbett and Dick Kroenke expanded their talents to the point that the team lost just 2 of its final 8 matches. Victories in a South Dakota tournament emphasized the fact that the team began to win as members developed what had been missing at first: experience.

Top right: A combination of good height and long distance bring about record-setting jumps, as long jumper Mary Perrier leaps to a school record of 16'6.5".

Lower left: Enroute to another first place, Mary Hoffman displays her excellent form and grace as she clears the hurdle.

Lower right: High temperatures combine with a difficult workout to give Coach Sonny Carlson the need to take time out for a cool drink of water.

With only two seniors — Captains Terri Moore and Stacy Godwin — on the girls' track team, Coaches Sonny Carlson and Len Volk knew that the season's success would depend on how well they could develop the potential of underclassmen who dominated the team. The 4-7 record was overlooked as the girls concentrated on refining their form. A measure of the team's progress was seen as the girls fused their best times to win the city finals.

Underclass successes dominate in girls' track

Softball joins conference competition

What's good for the boys must be good for the girls. So says the Federal Title IX regulation on sports equality. It was only logical, then, that softball could be added to the roster of girls' sports, just as gymnastics, cross country, basketball, swimming, tennis, and track had been introduced in earlier years. Fifteen girls answered the call for the first girls' fast-pitch team in the school's history as softball became an interscholastic sport. Making the adjustment from the slow-pitch approach of summer softball leagues to the fast-pitch required by the league proved to be troublesome, though not for Robin Knudsen, the team's leading pitcher who became the team's leader in every other category, as well. Her .479 batting average, 3 homeruns, and 18 stolen bases in 18 attempts put her at the top of the Eagles' list of statistics. Other strong hitters included Vickie Braman, Captain Debbie Linton, and Sue Godwin, whose combined hitting average of .397 was helpful but not good enough to bring the team a win until the fifth game of the year. A win over Wayzata boosted spirits and gave the girls the extra incentive they needed to then defeat Jefferson and Lincoln in back-to-back games. That success wasn't to last, however, when the team lost its first game in Regionals, Coach Dale Welter realized that his new team was just that: new, inexperienced, and only partially successful.

Who's on top? Seniors idolized by Juniors

Hail the Almighty Senior! Wearer of the cap and gown, master of semester finals, and idol of the underclass masses. As juniors and sophomores looked on in awe, seniors sat on their twelfth-grade pedestals, accepting the adulation of underclassmen who recognized the importance of senior contributions to the school. After all, wasn't it the seniors who won the Banana Eating Contest, fought the battle of the Isabella field trip and earned the title of the Class Without a Merit Scholarship Finalist?

Who has the style? Seniors!

While sophomores were still getting over the marvel of Chapstick, senior women were the visions of sheer beauty in their fashion-perfect outfits. They knew the way to get it all together with clothing and make-up. After all, there was no telling when they might run into a movie producer at McDonald's during open lunch.

Who carries the weight? Senior men have power

Sophomores got an unrealistic view of themselves when they came to Kennedy. Just because they were rather big and could handle the school's barbells, they felt that they had a lot of influence on others. It took them quite a while, but eventually they learned that age and experience were the most important qualities of Kennedy students. After all, wasn't it the seniors who were strong enough to carry the sophomore cheerleaders away during the Homecoming pepfest?

While sophomores sat and listened to their piggy bank's rattle with the change they received from babysitting and allowances, seniors made good use of the money they got from being employed at McDonald's, and Bridgeman's. Who has keys? Seniors' MTC days are over!

Seniors depended a lot on getting around, and for that reason, owned a wide variety of motorized vehicles. Ranging from the simplest of motorcycles to the more deluxe Chevy vans (used like transit after basketball games), the vehicles did wonders for seniors' status. Sophomores looked on in admiration, thinking of the day they wouldn't have to depend on their parents, MTC buses, or their favorite tricycles from grade school for their transportation.

Who feeds faces to gain first places? Seniors!

Among other things, seniors had quite a knack for making fools out of themselves. Stuffing their faces with bananas at the Homecoming pepfest brought them victory for one thing, but they felt that an even bigger thrill was to show off their talents as the B-Squad Kolleens. Juniors tried their hardest to imitate the seniors but it was all in vain. They found out that the only way to achieve such a high standard of imbecility was to first master the art of becoming a senior.

Who stuffs it in best? Seniors know the places

Seniors had quite a skill for knowing good places to eat. They practiced this talent by getting together after every sports event and cruising around, trying to find an exceptional place to pork out. Most every trip took them to the famed Mac and Don's, where upon receiving their food, they would proceed to the back quarters. There they would secretly have ice cube fights until they got caught. They were never defeated, though, because there were always other places that had back rooms and ice cubes.

Who's got it? Seniors rise to top

Being totally informed was what being a senior was all about. While sophomores sat at home doodling in their coloring books, seniors were inspecting every corner, trying to find where the action was. Some prospects took them to the far reaches of the school canteen where, after devouring a Suzy Q, they raced home to watch Sesame Street.

Who beats the curfew? Seniors make their time

Any time was the right time for the seniors who now felt that the age-old problem of early curfews were finally a part of the past. As sophomores still continued their struggles against time, seniors were having the time of their lives rollerskating, dancing, and going out for late-night pizzas. If they ever got home later than expected, they always came up with clever excuses like, "I lost my watch and didn't know what time it was." Besides, their parents were usually too tired to argue with them.

Who plays the right tune? Seniors decide

In preparation for the future, seniors found that their success was dependent upon their ability to make the right decisions at the right time. For sophomores, who weren't about to rush anything, life was just a series of keys waiting to be used to open the door of the future. That could explain why seniors were always in the right place at the right time. After all, who, but the senior winter sports captains, would be so eager as to get a Redi-whip pie in the face during the winter pepfest?

Who wins them all? Seniors shoot for best

While sophomores got the short end of the stick, seniors were making themselves known everywhere. When it came time to find a date, seniors always had the first shot at certain girls. The main reason that they could get the better choices was that they had more experience. During their underclass years, seniors learned that to make any progress they had to be aggressive. They even had the best seats for basketball games (even if they did happen to be on the bench).

Who leads the crowd? Seniors!

Seniors, with their high standards of leadership, were able to become leaders. Sophomores were also able to lead, but where did it get them? Reading papers at pepfests was quite boring. Seniors showed what it was really like to lead by waving Kleenex at the sophs. Now that was Class!

Attendance policy creates problems for late-rising juniors

Sue Potter's Predicament:

Did you ever have one of those days when nothing seems to go right? First of all, you wake up to a blaring radio as you frantically search for the volume knob. Unable to get your eyes open, you head for the bathroom to take a shower. You can tell you're there, because goose pimples emerge from walking barefoot on the tile floor. Once in the shower, you find that the water heater hadn't worked all night, so you step out of the shower dripping wet, only to find that your mom had taken the towels away to wash them. As you reach in the closet for your antiperspirant spray, you accidentally grab the can of hair spray. At least you won't have to worry about perspiring anymore. After you finally get dressed, you go to eat breakfast and find that the Super Sugar Crisp is stuck together at the bottom of the box. The clocks at your house are behind because the electricity went out over night, so you arrive late to school. Then you run into Mr. Lang, and guess what he greets you with? A tardy referral from yesterday.

Juniors discover consequences of life after school

Steve Gonczy's irritation:

You used to ask yourself, "How could anyone fall asleep in class?" Now you understand. Your teachers decided to form a conspiracy and pile on homework for this week. Monday your cell project for Biology is due along with the chapter test. Studying for a history test after a gymnastics meet takes Tuesday's time. On Wednesday you manage to get your studying done before your girlfriend comes over, but as you both sit up until 2:30, watching test patterns on TV, you remember your math test is that day. Thursday you go to a soccer game with your girlfriend, and later find yourself driving down 494 to Post Road. You're surely embarrassed when you fall asleep there. At 12:30 you start writing your theme for English. You manage to stumble blindly to school Friday remembering there is a gymnastics meet tonight, so you think you can get a little nap in Ms. Bjuggan's class. Unfortunately, you sleep through the dismissal bell, as Ms. Bjuggan lets you know when she hits you over the head with a book. Doesn't she remember her event-filled days when she was a junior?

Temptations destroy juniors' resistance to dieting restraints

Kari Austin's dilemma:

Wednesday is here, the third and most difficult day to your diet. Can you make it? It doesn't look very promising when your friends come to pick you up for school and instead take you to breakfast. Umm, Perkin's blueberry pancakes with butter and syrup. Who can resist? The day wears on at school and it's finally time for lunch. Instead of eating your apple at school, you take it to McDonald's with you and have a Big Mac besides. Returning to school, you find you are just in time for dessert at the Canteen. After demolishing 3 candy bars, you find yourself slowing down as you are not able to inhale your Twinkies like you usually do. You're too sick to attend practice, so you go home where you find no Alka-Seltzer. That evening you attend a basketball game where the aroma from the popcorn breaks down any resistance you have left. You can't face Mac's again, so you venture over to Bridgeman's and swallow a La La Palooza. Well, so much for today. There's always tomorrow: Thanksgiving.

Juniors confront hard times when money's involved

John Karlovich's ordeal:

You are desperately in need of money, so what do you do about it? You just got your pay check yesterday. Fine. But you had forgotten that you owe your dad for the gas you used to go to the hockey game Saturday night. (Little did he know about the party that was going on at the same time across town.) You can't forget about the money you borrowed from Mom for the Winter Formal corsage which turned out to be a couple of juicy hamburgers and thick frosties at Wendy's). And don't forget you also owe your bratty sister for the McDonald's from last Tuesday's spree after the big basketball game. (The only problem with her is that she charges interest.) Now you're left with only 59 cents which has to last for the next 2 weeks. Too bad you had planned a big date for this weekend. There has to be some way to get money fast. You could take the easy way out and borrow money or, you could always make a nice friendly visit to your neighborhood banker . . .

Schedule hassles cause frustration for sophomores

Mary Peppin's hassle:

One frustration of scheduling is being informed by Ms. Tasa that the class you needed was unavailable. After starting the day by missing your bus, you show your sophomore intelligence by shrewdly butting into the wrong line. You finally get into the lunchroom after being asphyxiated by 2 juniors with B.O. and bad breath. In expectation that no one would want the hour you needed for Ms. Tasa's class, you go ahead and sign up for your other classes, assuming that you will be able to register quickly and will be free to go out for breakfast. You get into line just in time for Ms. Tasa to tell you that the guy you let butt in front of you had taken the last spot for the hour you needed. Desperate for Ms. Tasa's class you are willing to try anything. When you get down on your hands and knees to beg for mercy, you are tripped over by the 2 juniors which you had previously encountered. On the verge of a nervous breakdown, you realize that because you can't get your English 10 class, you will have to revise your schedule for the third time. Well, you can always rely on a spot in Beginning Needlepoint.

Problems arise when sophomores don't own wheels

Kathy Reuder's situation:

Well, tonight's the big night and you finally mustered up enough courage to ask Scott Nelson to Sadie this morning. He accepted, but the only problem now is that you're a sophomore, and needless to say, you don't have a license. But that won't stop you, so you call home during lunch to see if your mom will be free to drive you to the dance. She is hesitant about it because tonight is her bridge night, but after constant coaxing on your part she gives in. After school you miss the bus and have to call home for a ride. Mom answers and she's upset because she was just giving a tea party for the ladies, but knowing that there is nothing you could do about it, she comes to pick you up. While you're getting ready for the dance, you find out that there is nothing to make freckles with, so . . . "Mom, could you drive me to the store?" Finally, you are ready to pick up your date, and with careful guidance, you mom finds his house. After a short introduction, you head for school only to run out of gas on Nicollet. As an hour trudges by, you finally make it to the dance, but there is only one problem. You forgot your money at home with your tickets.

Desire for food becomes obstacle for sophomores

Kris Rebeck's problem:

When you came to school today, you had no idea how terrible a Friday could be. You had no homework last night, so you had no tests to look forward to. The only problem now is that you didn't get to eat breakfast, and your stomach sounds like an elephant's mating call. With 5 minutes left of class, you can't stand the hunger pains any longer, so you try to make the great escape to the lunchroom. You forget that your teacher has been out of the room, so as you dash out of the door, you collide with him. He drags you back into the classroom and makes you wait until everyone

Johnson, Thomas
Johnson, Wendy
Jones, Laurie

Kampa, Paul

else had left before you could go. To make it worse, the cooks run out of food just as you get there, so you have to wait 10 minutes for your food. Finally you get to sit down and eat. Your friends are all done eating by the time you sit down so with their leftovers, they decide to start a food fight. To avoid injury, you decide to eat under the table. When you finish eating, you get out from under the table only to find that your friends have deserted you and left you to face the accusing eyes of Alice, the lunch lady. You try to talk your way out of it, but the attempt fails and you are assigned to lunchroom pickup.

Sophomores find dreams may not always come true

Ed Foster's anguish:

When you were in junior high, you thought that being a sophomore would be the greatest. Little did you know what was in store for you in the future. The day of the winter pepfest you get unmercifully nabbed by a group of upperclassmen. Ignoring your cries for mercy they wind you up with athletic tape. With a humiliating look on your face, you are carried out to the center of the gym. With the eyes of the whole school focused on you, all you can think of is getting your chance to burn on next year's unwary sophomores.

FACULTY

Changes achieve results on old issues

Left: Mr. Raymond Hanson principal-on-special-assignment;
director of student activities

Center: Mr. Michael Karbo
assistant principal;
coordinator of scheduling

Right: Mr. Donald Hasbrouck principal; controller of staffing, budgeting, and athletics

SHOCK: No more forging passes or skipping classes, no more choosing teachers and hours in walk-through registration, no more Senior Skip Day, Homecoming hall decorations, or days off at the year's end without exams for seniors. Did that mean there would be no more fun for Kennedy students? Not necessarily, according to school administrators.

SCHOOL SPIRIT: Beginning the year with a change in attendance policies and the re-establishment of student government, students began to take school more seriously. However, the administrative staff saw more than a change of rules taking place. They saw a better attitude toward school and an active involvement in out-of-school activities. They felt that the attitudes of the students were positive and the morale high. Even with a more positive atmosphere dominating the school, principals were not naive enough to expect that there would not be problems. What they did not realize was that their biggest problem would really be just a misunderstanding involving School Spirit Week. Poor communication between students, faculty members, and principals almost brought about a cancellation of the week all together. Principals reacted to a staff survey and a student petition and worked out a compromise on dates so that registration could go on as planned, and so class interruptions could be held to a minimum. With cooperation from all sides, School Spirit Week was successful and proved to be a welcome break in the middle of a seemingly long winter.

ATTENDANCE:

The adjustment from a fairly lenient attendance policy to a strict one was nothing less than difficult for students and staff alike. However, principals felt the advantages were worth the hassles incurred. By cracking down on skippers and truant students, administrators were able to help students to improve overall classroom performance. The result was a reduction in failing grades from 4.2 per cent of the students in 1976-77 to 3.4 percent this year. While no one expected that all students would be able to conform with stricter attendance policies, the principals were pleased with the degree of acceptance their new rules found.

COMPUTER SCHEDULING:

While The Torch complained that the return to computer scheduling signaled a loss of a student's right to choose classes by teacher and hour, principals found they had no alternative but to discontinue use of walk-through scheduling. New state guidelines on class attendance do not allow the use of class time for registration purposes. To use time during the school day for registration would mean losing state financial aid. The principals thought computer scheduling was the simplest and most efficient solution to the problem. Once the student has selected the subjects he or she wishes to take, this information is fed into a computer which in a matter of seconds will come up with a schedule. The computer in the process will even out the male/female ratio in each classroom. When principals looked back on the year, they felt the changes they had brought to the school had been in the best interest of education at Kennedy.

Class officers

Class officer elections found Craig Wiklund being elected as senior class president, Dyan Flatten as vice-president, and Wendy Godwin as secretary/treasurer. Their duties include setting up Baccalaureate, helping to plan Graduation, and organizing future class reunions.

A quiet moment of solitude is enjoyed by Steve Phelps and Shirley Horarik as they walk through the woods at Moir Park.

Cooperation makes hard job easier for 'Profiles'

The many hours the Profiles staff put into this book would have been in vain had it not been for the people who went out of their way to help. We would like to thank these people. First of all, we would like to thank our advisor, Jon Kuklish, who worked longer and harder than any of us, and who put up with the perversion and goofing around that came with most deadlines. We would also like to thank Ann Mueller who gave us a friendly shoulder to cry on when deadlines rolled around. We had many photographic problems this year, but luckily we had Steve Larson, Kim Favre, Steve Lassonde, and Tom Cherrey from Minnesota Valley to take the pressure off the staff photographers and Mr. Bonnicksen with his priceless advice. We also want to thank Jerry Peterson who made the yearbook sales run smoothly, and the rest of the faculty for their cooperation. Finally, we give our thanks to Lowell Larson, the janitor with the most difficult job in the school — cleaning up after the Profiles staff.

We feel everything has paid off in an excellent book, with some of the best ideas we have seen. Working with you has been a real experience. Thank you for a great year.

Moments alone to find yourself

Pushing, shoving, long lines . . . A few moments of solitude in a crowded world were cherished. You got away from the crowds and at last found yourself alone with your thoughts and the beauty around you. In this tranquil environment, you found a new outlook on life. Things that were unclear before took on deeper meaning. Your thoughts during those peaceful times were valuable in helping you cope with a crowded and rushed society.

Memories

The sun set on another school year. The laughter faded from the halls and the pile of books brought home at night vanished. You once longed for the final days of school, but now you feel they have passed too quickly. The good and bad times, the victories and defeats, the laughter and tears are now but memories to be treasured in the years to come.
